Yesterday in a Back Bay car there was an empty seat Leside a young lady, evidently of that much discussed class, but who gave no outward appearance of it. To be sure, she had a slightly protruding forehead and wore gold bowed eyeglasses. but there was no azure blue halo visible, nor was she in any way prim. A young gentleman, evidently a stranger in town, was about to take the empty seat, when the car gave a sudden start, causing him to crowd the young lady.

Touching his hat, he politely begged her pardon. With a slight inclination of the head, she replied:

"Fas onne est."

I have no doubt my face looked a little blank with astonishment but the expression on that young man's countenance was a study. A scri of dazed look came link his eyes, as drawing a long breath, which was almost a gasp, he instinctively seain touched has hat and murmured: "Thank you," but he was manifestly in terror during the balance of his ride.

"Ha!" he hissed, "folled, folled! But a time will, come!"

He had the mortification of seeing the girl he loved being led to the altar by the man he most detested.

As the clergyman pronounced them man and wife he cursed them both, and wished them all manner of ill-luck.

But in vain, They insisted on prospering, and when Providence further blessed them by sending them a sweet little baby boy the rival gnashed his teeth in impotent rage.

Yet he continued to hiss to himself that a time would come.

The haby grew in health and strength, and was the loveliest child that ever drew breath. It was universally conceded.

And then the foiled rival concocted a demoniac scheme. He planned it and carried it out, and when it showed fruit he grinned in ghoulish glee.

The haf in he bissed again. "I knew that when once they got the copy of that book I sent them, 'What to Do With Baby Before the Doctor Comes,' I should have my revenge."
