The Face Behind the Mask.

A ROMANCE.

affected an entrance. They were in the vault he knew by the darkness, though they had descended no stairs, and he was just wondering if their guide was not meditating some treachery by such a circuitous route, when suddenly a tumult of voices, and uproar, and confusion, met his ear. At the same instant their guide opened a door, revealing a dark passage, illuminated by a few rays of light, and which Sir Norman instantly recognized as that leading to the Black Chamber. Here again the duke paused, and turned round to them with a wild imploring face.

"Gentlemen, I do beseech you to let me enter before you do. I tell you they will murder me the very instant they discover I have led you here."

"That would be a great pity," said the count, "and the gallows will be cheated of one of its brightest ornaments. That is your den, of thieves, I suppose, from which all this uproar comes?"

"It is. And as I have guided you safely to it, surely I deserve this trifling boon."

"Trifling, do you call it?" interposed Sir Norman, "to let you make your escape, as you most assuredly will do the moment you are out of our sight. No, no; we are too old birds to be caught by such craft, and though the informer always gets off scot-free, your services deserve no such boon, for we could have found our way without your help. On with you, Sir Robert, and if your companions do kill you, console yourself with the thought that they have only anticipated the executioner by a few days."

With a perfectly heartrending groan the unfortunate duke walked on; but when they reached the archway directly before the room, he came to an obstinate halt, and positively refused to go a step farther. It was death, courage, or despair, feeling as he might as well die there as go in and be assassinated by his confederates, and not even the persuasive influence of Hubert's dagger could prevail on him to budge an inch further.

"Delay, then!" said the count, with perfect indifference. "And, soldiers, see that he does not escape. Now, Kingsley, let us have a glimpse of what is going on within."

Though the party had made considerable noise in advancing, and had spoken quite loudly in their little animated discussion with the duke, so great was the turmoil and confusion within, that it was not heeded or even heard. With very different feelings from those with which he had stood there last, Sir Norman stepped forward and stood beside the count, looking at the scene within.

The crimson curtain was in a state of "most admirable disorder," and the confusion of tongues was equal to Babel. No longer were they languidly promenading or idling in the cushioned chairs, but all seemed running to and fro in the wildest excitement, which the grandest duke among them seemed to share equally with the terrified white sylphs. Everybody appeared to be talking to everybody, and paying no attention whatever to the sentiments of their neighbors. One universal centre of union alone seemed to exist, and that was the green, judicial table near the throne, upon which, while all tongues ran, all eyes turned. For some minutes neither of the beholders could make out why, owing to the crowd (principally of the ladies) pressing around it. But Sir Norman guessed, and thrilled through with a vague sensation of terror, lest it should prove to be the dead body of Miranda. Skipping in and out among the females he saw the dwarf, performing his part of waltz-dance, rage and frenzy, twining both hands in his wig, as if he would have torn it out by the roots, and anon tearing at somebody else's wig, so that everybody backed off when he came near them.

"Who is that little fend?" inquired the count, "and what have they got there at the end of the room, pray?"

"That little fend is the ringleader here, and is entitled Prince Caliban. Regarding your other question," said Sir Norman, with a faint thrill, "there was a table there when I saw it last, but I am afraid there is something worse now."

"Could ever any mortal conceive of such a scene?" observed the count to himself, "look at that little picture of ugliness; how he hops about like a dropsical bullfrog. Some of the women are very pretty, too, and shine more than our court beauty that I have seen. Upon my word, it is the most extraordinary spectacle I ever heard of. I wonder what they've got that's so attractive down there?"

At the same moment, a loud voice within the circle abruptly exclaimed: "She revives! She revives! Back! Back, and give her air!"

Instantly the throng swayed and fell back, and the dwarf, with a sort of yell, whether of rage or relief nobody knew, swept them from side to side with a wave of his long arms, and cleared a wide vacancy for his own especial benefit. The action gave the count an opportunity of gratifying his curiosity. The object of attraction was now plainly visible. Sir Norman's surmises had been correct. The green table of the parliament house of the Midnight Court had been converted, by the aid of cushions and pillows, into an extemporized couch; and half buried in its downy depths lay Miranda the Queen. The sleeping robe of royal purple, trimmed with ermine, the circlets of jewels on arms, bosom and head, she still wore, and the beautiful face was whiter than fallen snow. Yet she was not dead as Sir Norman had dreaded; for the dark eyes were open, and were fixed with an unutterable depth of melancholy on vacancy. Her arms lay helplessly by her side, and someone, the court physician probably, was bending over her and feeling her pulse.

As the count's eyes fell upon her, he started back, and grasped Sir Norman's arms with consternation. "Good heavens, Kingsley," he cried, "it is Leoline herself!"

In his excitement he had spoken so loud, that, in the momentary silence that followed, the physician's directions his voice had rung through the room, and drew every eye upon them.

"We are seen; we are seen!" shouted Hubert, and as he spoke a terrible cry filled the room. In an instant every sword leaped from its scabbard, and the shrieks of the startled women rang appallingly out on the air. Sir Norman drew his sword, too; but the count, with his eyes fixed on Miranda, still held him by the arm and excitedly exclaimed:

"Tell me, tell me, is it Leoline?"

"Leoline! No—how could it be Leoline? They look alike, that all, draw your sword, count, and defend yourself; we are discovered, and they are upon us."

"We are upon them, you mean, and it is in one tremendous kiss!" said Leoline. They took alike, that all, draw your sword, count, and defend yourself; we are discovered, and they are upon us."

"Kissed Him Out."

In "The Argonauts of California" Mr. C. W. Haskins tells a good story of sauerkraut. In one of the mining districts near Sacramento a stockkeeper received a barrel of provisions which seemed to be spoiled to judge by the smell. Instead of throwing it away, he thrust it into one corner of a shed, where waste and rubbish were piled upon it.

One day a burly, dust covered Dutchman entered the store.

"I want the same dot," pointing toward the shed.

"What is dot?" inquired the storekeeper.

"It shows you," said the miner. "You must kiss me dot." And to the shed they went, where, pointing to the rubbish heap, the Dutchman explained, "Some of dot in dere was rat I want."

Boxes and barrels were removed, and the condemned barrel was exposed. But when the miner eagerly pointed to it the trader told him it was spoiled meat, not fit to eat.

"I know better as dot," said the Dutchman. "You bust him in and I shows you."

An ax was brought and the barrel "busted in," when, instead of spoiled meat, there was revealed some good, old fashioned sauerkraut, made in Holland and shipped around Cape Horn.

"I know it," said the delighted miner. "I nose him out!"

The sauerkraut sold readily at a dollar a pound and was in great demand. The Dutch miners heard of it and walked 10 and 15 miles to get a taste of the dainty.

A Slave's Cargo.

From the time we first got on board the slave, says J. Taylor Wood in The Atlantic, had we heard moans, cries and rumblings coming from below, and as soon as the captain and crew were removed the batches had been taken off, when there arose a hot blast as from a channel house, sickening and overpowering. In the hold were 300 human beings, gasping, struggling for breath, dying, their bodies, limbs and faces all expressing terrible suffering. In their agonizing fight for life some had torn or wounded themselves or their neighbors; some were stiffened in the most unnatural positions.

As soon as I knew the condition of things I sent the boat back for the doctor and some whiskey. He returned, bringing also the captain, and for an hour or more we were all hard at work lifting and helping the poor creatures on deck, where they were laid out in rows. A little water and stimulants revived most of them. Some, however, were dead or too far gone to be revived. The doctor worked earnestly over each one, but 17 were beyond human skill. As fast as his pronounced them dead they were quickly dropped overboard.

The "King of Rome."

What became of Napoleon's son is a question often asked, as the little mention is made in history of the young prince, the desire of his father's life, who was born March 20, 1811, amid great rejoicing in Paris and called the "king of Rome." In January, 1814, Napoleon embraced his wife and child for the last time, and this really ended the reign of the little king, who never saw his kingdom. He was reared in the Austrian court under the name of Duke of Reichstadt and grew to be a handsome young fellow and quite a brilliant scholar. He had one short year of military life and then contracted pulmonary disease, from which he died in his twenty-second year. He worshipped the memory of his father and always spent the anniversary of his death, July 22, in his own rooms. He is buried in the Carthusian monastery of Vienna, which is the Austrian Westminster abbey.

How Masks Are Made.

Paper masks are made by doubling one sheet of a specially prepared paper, wetting it and molding it by hand over a face form. It is then dried by artificial heat. Openings are cut for eyes, nose and mouth, and it is painted and decorated by hand as desired.

Wire masks are made by stamping a piece of wire netting about a foot square over a face mold in a large machine, inclosing the rough wire edges in a narrow strip of lead. Then it is painted. The painting is done by hand in oil colors.

Must Discriminate.

"For mercy's sake, Mildred," exclaimed Mrs. Hichmore, shocked at the negligee attire of her youngest daughter, who had gone to the front door to look at a fire on the other side of the street. "Don't you know you never ought to appear in public with your collar unbuttoned, and your sleeves rolled up except when you are playing golf?"

Table Talk.

"They say the er-late departed," said the first cannibal, indicating the dish before them, "was a very learned man."

"Indeed?" replied the other, helping himself for the third time. "Then this is truly what the white men call an 'intellectual feast.'"

Where Changes Are Rapid.

The South American stretched himself, yawned and sat up.

"Well, how goes the government?" asked the visitor who had just entered.

"How do I know?" was the answering question. "I've been asleep for over an hour."

Very fine razors are made at the present day, but of no finer steel than that contained in the Damascus swords and knives which the ancients used several thousand years ago.
