Roberta B. Nelson gives a very good idea of the magnificent display of Henry. NLIT of England and Philip I of France when they met in good fellowship on the plain of Guisnes 380 years ago.

The king's retinue had been selected. The king's retinue had been selected from the noblest of the kingdom. Wolsey, with his 300 followers, headed the escort, and was followed by dukes, earls; barons, bishers and knights, with their retainers. The scort numbered 4,000 horsemen, not The scort numbered 4,000 horsemen, not including the queen's escort, numbering nearly 4,000 persons and 800 horses. The French king had an equally splendid retinue. King Henry and his great cavalcade are taken, on arrival at Guisnes, to the magnificent palace provided by Wolsey, here was an old palace there, and Wolse, had established himself in that, and epeted one for his king. The palace was the most beautiful place imaginable.

and elected one for his king. The palace was the most beautiful place imaginable. It had so many glazed windows that it looked as though built of crystal, and much of the woodwork, both inside and out, we covered with gold. All the way from the gate to the door were rows of silver stances. Inside, the walls of the chambers and halls were hung with magnificent tapestary embroidered in gold, and the ceilings were draped with white silk.

And thenry was not to spend all of his time in his fine palace, for tents had been erected on the plain, and in these the two kings and their suits were to lodge. The tents of the French king were pitched just outside the walls of the town of Ardres and actapled almost to the tents of King lient.

The falts in which the two queens were lodged were covered with cloth of gold, as were also no tents of the ladies in attendance upon them and of all members of the royal families. The effect was dazzling. Resultful pavilions, hung with cloth of gold, dotted the plain. Banners floated dverywhere; fountains of wine spouter win the bright June sunshine; horses, de crated with fluttering ribbons, pranced about gaily. So gorgeous had the ous had the

In the first place, take the word "mere."

Any one who will take the trouble to notice the use of this word as applied to an opponent's doctrine cannot fail, I think, to be convinced that it is doing a wondrous appoint of harm. It has, of course, drous amount of harm. It has, of course, important uses as applied to one's own doctrire, but I think I can show by a few examples that when used in characterizing an opponent's opinion it is very apt to express, primarily, irritation and the attempt to ridicule, to threaten or to embarrass an opponent. If it does not possess these implications, it is pleonastic, like any oath. It is especially scathing when coupled with such words as "brute," "bare," or "empty," "abstract," "dead." So, for example:

example:

A griter is discoursing on the deep wealth of the emotional life. His opponent, straightway aims and discharges his heavy artillery at the absurdity, fickleness and triviality of "mere sentiment." Of course this is caricature, and not description, for "mere sentiment" is not what is meant.—Journal of Ethics.

She never even wore her hair more than three weeks in the same way. She knew that the same dishes became insipid if eternally served with the same sauce. In business she was the husband's adviser. She knew all his affairs and shared them. English and American women often did not know whether their husbands were on the road to ruin or wealth.

whether their husbands were on the road to ruin or wealth.

Mr. O'Rell then spoke at length of the American woman. In America, Mrs. Jonathan was a distinct type. An American girl, from the age of 17, had almost every liberty, yet American women inspired respect overywhere. The different position which women occupied in America, as compared with England, was due, he thought, largely to education. American boys and girls sat together in the same schools, and the girls took the majority of prizes. He also paid a compliment to the chivalry of American men to the opposite sex, which, he said, he had found in no other country.

The Princess of Wales a day or two be-fore Christmas always sends off a special messenger with several big boxes of goods for the royal palace in Copenhagen. The boxes hold many hundreds of dollars' worth of Christmas gifts from the prin-cess to her Danish relatives. She remem-

People who do the great things are al-ways those who have paid attention to the small ones. There are great societies that would never have been formed, great conwould never have been formed, great congregations of women that would never have been brought together, but for the possession by some woman of the habit and facility in writing and correspondence. These things are not put on, and cannot be acquired all at once; they must be a part of the habit of one's life. Attended to as a duty they are a post important of

Care of the Finger Nails.

Why doesn't the usual woman take better care of her finger nails? I wonder very many times a day when I have occasion to notice the shortcoming. It only takes a few minutes each day to keep them in a really fine condition. After the hands are washed each morning use the nailbrush thoroughly, and when they are quite dry push back the skin gently where it grows around the edges of the nails. Don't cut it away, as the professional manicures do, or use a steel pointed instrument, but an orange wood stick, which is kept for that purpose only. While the nail is still moist use the point of a file to remove any dust or specks which the brush has overlooked. If you file the nails a bit every other day they will need no cutting, and any rough edges of skin may be cut off by the nail soissors.—Boston Traveler. Care of the Finger Natla.
