PEAKE'S No. 3 WHARF.

CHARLOTTETOWN.

Another of the Lindseys.

Lord Crawford, who is one of the two Britons taking part in the ocean race for the Kaiser's cup a fortnight hence on his yacht Wulhalla, is one of the most famous of English yachtsmen. He has carried the burgee of the Royal yacht squadron into every corner of the maritime universe spending many months in the scientific exploration of all the islands of the southern Pacific, and is, moreover, the great grandson of that twenty-third earl of Crawford who, on being introduced by King George III., to the American general, Benedict Arnold, put his hand behind his back and exclaimed that he had no intention of shaking hands with a traitor. Of course Benedict Arnold challenged him and a meeting took place. Arnold won the first fire and missed the earl. The latter, deeming that he had granted the man sufficient satisfaction, thereupon walked away.

"Way don't you fire?" cried Arnold.

"At you?" exclaimed Lord Crawford over his shoulder, "no sir, I leave you to the hangman."

This Lord Crawford, by the way, was one of the English generals at the battle of Ticonderoga, where he received no less than thirteen bullets through his coat.

When I mention that this particular earl was the twenty-third of his line and that the present lord is the twenty-sixth, it will be realized how ancient is this pedigree, the 500th anniversary of the creation of which in 1398 was celebrated some seven years ago by numerous members of the historic house of Lindsey throughout the length and breadth of the British empire.

It is claimed that the Lindseys are of Scandinavian rather than of Gaelic origin, and that they are descended from identically the same stock as the duke of Normandy, who, after the battle of Hastings, became king of England. In fact, this relationship was acknowledged by the early English monarchs, and the second earl was named the "Consanguineous" by King Henry V. For a time the earls of Crawford were the feudal lords of the now glorified Hamiltons, and frequently intermarried with the royal houses of Stuart and Bruce, while among the foreign sovereign families that include lords of Lindsey among their ancestors is the royal French-Spanish and Italian dynasty of Bourbon and the imperial house of Hapsburg.

So great was the grandeur of the Lindsey family in the fifteenth century that when its chief, the fifth earl of Crawford, lord high admiral and lord high justiciary of Scotland, was created duke of Montrose by King James he refrained from assuming the title, considering it to be beneath his dignity, an example which was followed by his successors, who did not even think it worth while to protest when, nearly 200 years later, the duke-dom of Montrose was conferred upon the head of the house of Graham.

The present earl is an odd looking man. His aggressively ruddy looks, beard, and mustache have now been softened by the presence of many silver hairs. But he still retains his multitude of freckles, invariably wears blue spectacles perched on an aquiline nose, and is almost invariably dressed in a dark blue sack coat, with his left hand forever in its pocket. He is probably the most learned member of the house of lords, and in addition to the Scotch Order of the Thistle, the French Legion of Honor, and other distinctions of the same kind, has about twenty-two letters after his name, all of which are the initials of famous English and foreign scientific bodies to which he belongs.

Widely known as his name as the former president of the Royal Astronomical society and as leader in all sorts of scientific movements, it has received still more notoriety in connection with the mysterious robbery of his father's corpse some years ago, the outrage being identical with that perpetrated upon the body of the late A. T. Stewart of New York. Three months after the late earl's death the museum which he had erected in the park of his country seat, Dun Eoibh, was found broken open and the corpse removed. The services of every imaginable detective agency, by final and private, were brought into play in order to discover a clue to the re-entrances and to recover the body. An enormous amount of money was spent in this manner without the slightest result being obtained. Nearly a year later, however, the body of the dead earl was discovered by the head gardener of Dun Eoibh, buried in a shrubbery not more than a hundred yards distant from the museum. The reason for the ghastly theft, as well as the circumstances of the recovery of the body and the failure to punish the real investigators of the crime, have all remained shrouded in mystery to this day. But Lord Crawford became imbued with such an aversion to Dun Eoibh after this that, leaving the place about up for a number of years, he finally sold it and now makes his principal home at Haig hall, near Wigan.

The superb astronomical instruments which were a feature of Dun Eoibh, and which earned for it observatory a name throughout Europe and America, have been presented by him to the new Royal Scotch observatory, near Edinburgh, with which he has endowed his native kingdom, while his splendid astronomical library, second only to that of the imperial observatory at Petersburg, has also been presented to the Scottish people-Marquis de Fontenay.

Items of Interest.

Brother Shine, superior general of the Presentation Brothers, died at Cork on April 20.

Mgr. Ridolfi, Archbishop-Bishop of Todi, has been named Delegate Apostolic to Mexico.

The Christian Brothers have just celebrated the centenary of their foundation in Carrick-on-Suir by laying the foundation of a new science and technical school in close proximity to their existing schools.

Bishop Fallize, of Norway, writes: "I have another cause for rejoicing. The congregations of nuns, presented in many Catholic countries, are so very welcome in Protestant Norway that those already established here are unable to answer all the requests made for their services. So I found myself under the necessity of founding a congregation of native Sisters, under the name of Sisters of St. Francis Xavier. It was established last winter at Bergen, and the novitiate is full."

It is interesting to note that the two Anglican clergymen, Rev. Mr. Evans and Rev. Mr. Hume, who came into prominence in connection with the secession of a considerable portion of the congregation of the Protestant Church of St. Michael's, Shoreham, England, are now Catholic priests. Father Evans, who was ordained some time ago, is now officiating at Brighton, and Father Hume, who was ordained on Holy Saturday, at St. Bado's, Rome, has just arrived in London.

The first Catholic girl in Glasgow if not in all Scotland, to take the degree of Bachelor of Science, is Miss Kathleen N. Jan, who has just won her degree with special distinction at Glasgow University. Miss Nolan's preliminary education was received at the Ursuline Convent, Sligo, Ireland. She won a number of scholarships at the Downhill Training College, and captured two class medals and one for science at the Glasgow University.

The Sydney "Freeman's Journal" to hand announces the death at Bathurst of Rev. Mother Mary Ignatius Croke, sister of the late Archbishop of Cashel. Some forty years ago she founded the house of her order in Bathurst, in which she died. Many other convents in the colony owe their existence to her zeal and energy. Mother Croke was the eldest of a family of eight, five of whom devoted their lives to the service of God. She lived to the advanced age of eighty-six.

Discussing in "The Times," of London, the grievous hardships that will be suffered by the scattered Protestant congregations in France as a result of the separation bill, Lord Llandoff says: "It is only by setting forth the details of the ecclesiastical legislation proposed in France that it becomes possible to realize the malignant hostility to every form of Christianity exhibited by the predominant party in the French Legislature."

Mgr. John S. Vaughan, who has just joined the Carthusians, is a member of the ancient and notable family of Vaughan, which in one generation gave six of its sons to the Church as priests and four daughters as nuns. He is a brother of the late Cardinal Vaughan, also of Father Bernard Vaughan, S. J., and of Father Kinselm Vaughan, who is at present in South America, collecting funds for Westminster Cathedral. Mgr. Vaughan is well known all over the country, and particularly in London, as one of the leading pulpit orators of the day.

About the best situated Sunday school boy in the Catholic world at present is probably Master Rodolfo Funari, of Rome. He is the victor in a prize competition, the subject matter of which was the recital, by heart, of Ballarmino's Othobium. Formerly the victor in the contest died with the Cardinal Vicar of Rome who afterwards presented him to the Pope; and the Holy Father gave him a present and his blessing. In Pius IX's time sovereign honors were accorded to the boy by the Swiss Guard, but Leo XIII. did away with that custom. Pius X., however, has revived it, with all its former brilliancy. And so young Funari has had what his small American Catholic brother would be apt to call "the time of his life."

From One, New Zealand, comes news of the death of one of the most distinguished nuns of the Order of St. Dominic. The devoted servant of God in question, Mother M. Gabriel Gill, was born in Dublin close on seventy years ago. She entered the novitiate at Sion Hill, Blackrook, when slightly over eighteen years of age. Some years after her profession she was sent to New Zealand. There she found absolutely nothing in the nature of organized Catholic female education. To ask to her, the colony is now studded over with Dominican high schools, university colleges and intermediate schools. In these the most advanced form of teaching prevails, but, true to her great vocation, Mother Gabriel did not forget the poor, for whom she founded numerous schools no less effective as centres of enlightenment than those which she established for the children of the more wealthy section of the people. Looking back on the story of Mother Gabriel Gill's life and the record of what she accomplished for the advancement of religion, it is impossible not to feel that this glorious and holy daughter of Ireland deserves to be described as the St. Bridgid of Australia.

For many years, says the London "Catholic Times," religious pees has prevailed in Switzerland. But of late there have been symptoms of strife. A meeting has been held at Olten, which was attended by people from the cantons of Solothurn, Basel, Aargau and Lucerne, and it was decided to form an association for the whole of Switzerland, with the object of combating "clericalism." In the present state of society the formation of societies of this kind is inevitable. For various reasons the Catholic Church arouses opposition. There are many who are in favor of divorce, and the Church is against it; others would exclude religion from the schools, and the Church does all that is possible to keep it there; and so on. Then there are Protestants who are glad to join in any anti-Catholic combination, Freemasons who are under the ban of the Church, and therefore hostile to it, and men who are infidels and adverse to religion of whatever kind. To all these the Church is a common enemy, and they readily unite in warfare against it. It is no sign of defect or excess in the discharge of clerical duty to evoke their anger. They are all the more determined in their attacks on the clergy the more efficiently the reverend gentlemen do their work.

The discussion of the second article of the separation bill brought a surprise for the French Minister of Worship. One amendment after another was rejected, when a Republican deputy named M. Sibille proposed that religious services rendered in public establishments, such as lycées, colleges, schools, hospitals, asylums and prisons, should be entitled to payment from the budget of worship. He professed himself a supporter of the bill, but desired that ministers of religion should be paid for the services they gave to the young, the suffering or the imprisoned; none of these did he wish to see deprived of the consolations of religion. M. Briand, and even M. Bienvenu Martin himself, pointed out that the amendment went directly against the principle of the bill, which abolished all State support of religious worship. The chamber was in a curious temper, and the voting was secret. When the votes were counted, the president announced that 287 were for and only 281 against the amendment. True, by a majority of six, the Government was beaten, and must now accept the duty of paying for religious services when given in any of the institutes of the State. It is a curious incident, and makes clear that not all the Republican majority are violent anti-clerical.

MILBURN'S LAXA-LIVER PILLS.

Stimulate the sluggish liver, clean the coated tongue, sweeten the breath, clear away all waste and poisonous matter from the system, and cure Sick Headache, Biliousness, Constipation, Heartburn, Jaundice, Water Brash, Catarrh of the Stomach, etc.

Mrs. C. Windrum, Baldur, Man., writes:—I suffered for years from liver troubles, and endured more than tongue can tell. I tried a great many different remedies, but they were of little or no benefit to me. Some time ago I got a trial package of Laxa-Liver Pills, and they proved so beneficial to me that I procured more. I highly recommend them to anyone suffering from disordered liver.
