Prehistoric Man in Egypt and Syria.

A gala meeting was held by the Victoria Philosophical Institute of London in the second week in May, at which its members gave a worthy welcome to Vice-Chancellor Dawson, C. M. G., of McGill University, Montreal, at whose instance the British Association visits Canada this year. The Society of Arts kindly lent its premises for the occasion, and its great theatre was crowded in every part long before the hour of meeting The chair was taken by Sir H. Barkly, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., F.R.S., who-atter the new members had been announced by Captain F. Petrie, the secretary— welcomed Dr. Dawson amid loud applause, and asked him to deliver his Address: It was on "Prehistoric Man in Egypt and Syria," and was illustrated by large diagrams, also flint implements and bones collected by Dr. Dawson himself on the spot during his winter tour in the East; Professor Boyd-Dawkins, F. R.S., kindly assisted in the classification of the bones. In dealing with his subject, Dr. Dawson remarked that, Great interest attaches to any remains which, is countries historically so old, may indicate the residence of man before the dawn of history. In Eypt, nodules of flint are very abundant in the Eocen limestones, and, where these have been wasted away, remain on the surface. In wasted away, remain on the surface. In many places there is good evidence that the flint thus to be found everywhere has been, and still is, used for the manufac-ture of flakes, knives and other implements. These, as is well known, were used for many purposes by the ancient Egyptians, and in modern times gunflints and strike-lights still continue to fints and strike-lights of worked flints for closing up wounded limbs and bark. be made. The debris of worked flints found on the surface is thus of little value as an indication of any flint-folk preceding the old Egyptians. Dr. Dawson then remarked that many geologists in these days had an aversion to using the word "Antedion account of the nature luvian." of the work which, in years now gone by, unlearned people had attribut-ed to the Flood described in Scripture, but as the aversion to the use of that word was, he thought, not called for in these days, he hoped it would pass away. SEASONABLE HINTS.—The Sanitary-Journal gives some "Seasonable hints" which are worthy of attention. In view of the near approach of the bathing season our contemporary advises :- "Be not too ready to get into cold water out of doors. Better to bathe at home until the weather and water get decidedly warm. Go not into cold water when overheated, nor when cooling off, nor free. when cold, nor remain in too long at first. Fatal cramps are caused by such indiscretions.
