THE PANGS OF REMORSE

OR—

A COMPLICATED TANGLE.

CHAPTER X.

They advanced to meet the two similarly-cloaked figures, and Dalton, who seemed less anxious and more ready as the time for the meeting drew near, said, in a low voice:

"For Heaven's sake; don't forget, Clifford; aim at his pistol hand and fire at the second. It is no use firing at his heart, for—"

The opponents had reached them before the sentence was concluded and Clarence Clifford, who seemed not to have heard it, raised his leg. The salutation was returned and the two seconds, after raising their hats likewise, drew apart to measure the distance, settle the weapons, etc.

Lord Harcourt stood with folded arms, his face turned to the sea.

Clarence Clifford paced slowly up and down, his head held up with a haughty sternness, his eyes flashing and resolute.

Col. Hawkesley stepped forward.

"Mr. Clifford," he said, with the smooth, polite voice, "Mr. Dalton and I cannot hit it off as one might wish. The choice of weapons is with the challenger. You, he tells me, leave the choice to my friend, Lord Harcourt, but he, Mr. Dalton, insists that the pistol shall be used. Now—"

Clarence Clifford stopped the smooth, courteous speech by a wave of his hand.

"Sir," he said, "I am indifferent. Let your principal choose the weapons. All that I ask is that he do so quickly and let me hasten to punish him."

Lord Harcourt made half a step forward at the cold contempt of the words, but stood still again and turned a sardonic smile upon the stern young face.

Col. Hawkesley conferred with his principal for a moment, then returned and with the utmost politeness informed Dalton that Lord Harcourt had decided to use the sword.

Dalton sullenly unlocked the sword cases, compared the weapons, and raised another question.

He would have none but Clarence Clifford's rapiers.

The dispute went on for some minutes in a smooth undertone, until Clarence Clifford strode forward, laid his hand on his second's shoulders, and said:

"Give way. Let me see their swords."

Col. Hawkesley handed him Lord Harcourt's rapier.

He examined them, bent them and weighed one in his hand, then with a careless gesture said:

"That will do. I am ready."

Dalton turned and walked to the spot with him.

"One word," he whispered in his ear. "Have—have—you any message?"

"Message?" repeated Clarence Clifford. "To whom?"

"To anyone," replied the young man, who looked upon his principal as already dead. "To your mother—your sister—your friends."

"I have no mother—no sister—no brother—no friends," came the low, thrilling reply. "I am alone in the world, and ready, quite ready to leave it, after I have marked this cowardly bullier of women."

Whether the words reached Lord Harcourt or he was impatient, he stepped forward, fung his coat to Col. Hawkesley, and put himself into position.

With calm composure Clarence Clifford removed his coat, handed his hat to Dalton and confronted him.

"One, two, three, garde!"

Lord Harcourt felt his opponent's weapon for a moment, miscalculated the strength opposed to him, and made a feint.

Instantly the sharp, serpent-like steel of the younger man pierced his arm.

He set his teeth hard as he felt the prick, and, with his weapon on guard, looked down into the calm depths of Clarence Clifford's eyes with a glittering snakelike regard.

"So!" he muttered. "You think you can throw me off, do you? Well, caution, and it shall be one more life out with the tide."

Thus self-warmed the practiced duelist kept a careful guard and watched his opportunity.

But none seemed given him.

Clarence Clifford's sword met him at every point; he could not by strength or skill break down or throw him off his guard.

Suddenly, while he was still watching, Clarence made a feint, Lord Harcourt was a little too late and the supple steel had pierced another little hole and snapped his lordship's weapon in two.

The two seconds sprang between them, but some of Lord Harcourt's blood had flown and what remained was burning to revenge the lost.

"This is child's play, after all," he ground out, with slow and metallic distinctness. "It is too puerile; let us have some powder."

"No!" exclaimed Dalton, fiercely. "Blood has been drawn; the duel is over. You are satisfied, Col. Hawkesley?"

But the colonel was not, and looked from one to the other, Lord Harcourt stanching the two small holes in his arm, the younger man standing firm and immovable, his weapon crossed upon his arm.

"Well—" he said, but Lord Harcourt interrupted him. "We came for satisfaction," he said, "not a hollow farce. I demand satisfaction, and, by Heaven, I will have it!"

"Never fear, my lord," rang out the clear, haughty tones of his opponent. "I but wait your weapon."

"Give me the pistols," said Lord Harcourt, striding himself to the case.

But Col. Hawkesley got them, and he and Dalton examined them.

"They are loaded," said he. "Is your man ready, sir?"

"He is," said Dalton.

"Then place him, if you please," said the colonel, politely.

Dalton measured out the distance, and Clarence Clifford took up his position, Dalton whispering as he did so: "Mind, he will murder you—it is murder. But as a last chance, aim at the pistol hand."

Clarence Clifford nodded, and Col. Hawkesley took but the white handkerchief.

"When I let it fall, gentlemen," he said.

"One, two—"

Before the word "three" could be pronounced, a woman's shriek startled the colonel into silence, the handkerchief remained firm in his grasp, and Lord Harcourt turned swiftly to see whence the cry proceeded.

The lady to whom Clarence Clifford had heard him speaking in the ante-room ran swiftly towards them, and catching Lord Harcourt's pistol arm stood panting for breath.

"Thank Heaven!" she cried. "It is not too late!"

"No," sneered Lord Harcourt, savagely. "You are in time to see the fight. 'Fore Heaven, I thought it was your lordship's scream. Hawkesley, put up the handkerchief."

"No!" shrieked the lady. "I will not have his blood shed for me. Oh, sir," and she sprang to Clarence Clifford's side and catching his arm looked up into his face. "For Heaven's sake, desist; he will kill you."

"Stand aside," shouted Lord Harcourt. "Hawkesley, have the goodness to take Lady Melville away. I will give the word."

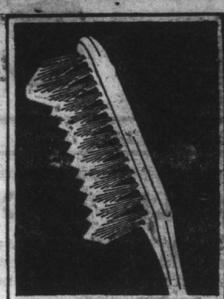

The colonel, all a throb for the coming bloodshed, advanced and with a firm hand was about to take her from Clarence Clifford's arm, but he stopped him with uplifted hand and beckoned Dalton.

"Give the lady your arm, Dalton," he said, and his voice shook. "Madam be patient and strong for a moment."

Dalton by using as little force as possible, drew her aside, shrieking and struggling, her hands before her eyes.

The colonel resumed the handkerchief, gave the words, "One, two, three," dropped the speck of white, and two reports rang out sharp and spitting on the thick, misty air.

A dull thud followed, and Dalton, loosing his hold of Lady Melville, sprang forward and knelt beside the form of Clarence Clifford.

Five things you should know about your tooth brush

- 1 Is it made of the best bristles the world produces?
- 2 Are the bristles serrated (saw-toothed), and set in a curve to fit against all your teeth, and to reach the crevices between?
- 3 Does it have a large end tuft, and a properly curved handle so that the end tuft can reach and clean back teeth?
- 4 Will it keep germs, tartar, food debris, and other unclean substances off your teeth?
- 5 Is it fully guaranteed?

When your tooth brush is a Propyl-lactic, you can answer all of those five questions correctly. The Propyl-lactic Tooth Brush has for more than forty years been the standard, correctly designed tooth brush for keeping teeth clean, white and beautiful.

The Cosmos

Professor Shapley, dealing in Harper's Magazine with the size of the universe, says:

The prevailing conception of the physical universe has gradually evolved in close correlation with the mental evolution of man. To the primitive man the cosmos, of course, was anthropocentric—a natural depiction from the circularity of the horizon and the concentric character of the dome of heaven. At a subsequent stage of intellectual progress the universe was, no doubt, centred in restricted areas on the surface of the Earth rather than in the individual, and man adopted a geocentric or topocentric idea of the world. In this later stage the cosmos was perceived to be larger than formerly; and with each subsequent step in the widening of mental horizon, greater physical dimensions have been found. To Ptolemy and his school the universe was no longer geocentric but geocentric; and since the time of Copernicus the Sun, as the dominating body of the solar system, has been considered to be at or near the center of the stellar domain. We have in general accepted the heliocentric view of the universe for the last four centuries.

The researches of recent times have again changed the conception of the scale of the visible universe, and of the position of its centre. Neither the individual, nor his abode, nor his earth, nor his sun has now the dignity of a central place. For one thing, the solar system is slightly to the north side of the central plane of the Milky Way and is increasing the distance from that plane as time goes on. In addition, as previously noted, we are at least six hundred centuries of light-travel from the central region of the Milky Way. (A light year—the distance which a ray of light will travel in one year—is about six trillion miles.)

NERVES AND FAINTING SPELLS

Sent Woman to Bed. Great Change After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sarnia, Ontario.—"After my girlie was born I was a wreck. My nerves were so terrible for words and I simply could not stand or walk without pains. I suffered with fainting spells until I was no longer any good for my household duties and had to take to my bed. The doctor said I should have an operation, but I was not in a fit condition at that time. My neighbor said, 'Why don't you try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?' I am sure it will do you good and will save those doctor's bills." So I was advised by my husband to try it after I told him about it. I am very thankful to say that I was soon able to take a few hours for a while as rooms were so quiet at that time. My baby is a beautiful girl and I have not yet had an operation, thanks to your medicine. I have recommended the Vegetable Compound to a few people I know and they all think it is good. It has done me good and I feel and look a different person. These last few months and I could not be without a bottle of your medicine in the house. You can see this letter as you see it, as I should be only too glad for every word as I have to know what it has done for me."—Mrs. ROBERT G. McNEED, R. R. No. 2, Sarnia, Ontario.

A recent canvass of women users of the Vegetable Compound report 98 out of 100 received beneficial results. C
