THE PICKEREL AND ITS EYE.

Startling Experience of a Sport Who Angled for Chubs.

The Three-Mile Running Record Reduced by Half a Second.

PISCATORIAL.

STARTLING EXPERIENCE WITH A NEW BAIT. ROULETTE, Pa., April 16 .- Wm. Lillibridge was fishing in the Allegheny River near Portville the other day for silver chubs. He had caught but one after an hour's fishing, and was on the point of pulling up and going home when he felt a smart jerk on his line, which began to move off in the water. He found that he had hooked a big fish, and after a lively struggle the hook's hold was broken and the prize escaped. On examining his hook Lillibridge was surprised to see a fish's eye impaled on it. The eye was a big one, and from the way the hook was fastened in it the fisherman saw that the hook must have caught the fish accidentally in the eye, and that the fish had not bitten at the bait. In the struggle the eye was torn from its

Having heard that a fish's eye was a killing bait for perch and pickerel, Lillibridge concluded to give this strangely acquired eye a trial. He dropped his hook into the river and played it about for a moment when he got a strike that was sufficient indersement of the taking qualities of a fish's eye for bait. He had an exciting fight with the fish for a few seconds, but his tackle was not intended for fish of that size and strength and his line parted a foot or two above the hook. He lost his fish but went home and got stronger tackle, thinking that if fish of that size were biting he would try a little further to get

It happened that his wife, evidently wanting to be sure of having fish for dinner, had during his absence purchased a mess of suckers from some boys who had been net fishing. Lillibridge took the eyes out of two or three of the suckers and returned to the river. He made a cast with one of the sucker eyes, and the bait had scarcely touched the water before it was seized by a fish that gave the angler another contained. good fight. This one was landed. It was went to remove his hook from its jaw he the pickerel's mouth. He recognized it as claim that the discrimination against flour the piece that had been broken from his in the freight rates prevent them from fish line only a few minutes before. This was surprising, but when the fisherman discovered that the pickerel had but one eye, the missing one having but recently keen removed from the socket, his amazement was great. There could be no doubt that the missing eye was the one that his chub hook had saught and torn from the pickerel less than a quarter of an hour before. The pickerel had evidently considered the removal of his eye from its natural place as of small consequence compared to its attractiveness as an epicurean delicacy, and had pro-ceeded to recover it and tickle his plate with it the instant it reappeared in the water. The fisherman's hock interrupted the process, and, if the line had been strong enough, the pickerel would have fallen victim to his intention of dining on his own eye. But his appetite and nerve were so little disturbed by the tearing of the eye from its socket, and the subsequent placing of it and a two-inch hook in his hroat, that when the sucker's eye appeared he did not hesitate to try his chances with that, and was lost.
