Death Came Suddenly

To Mr. James Cummings, Foreman for Laidlaw & Watson.

Apoplexy the Supposed Cause - Seized Without Warning.

Sad and sudden was the death of James Cummings, late foreman of Laidlaw & Watson's shoe factory. Yesterday Mr. Cummings went to work as usual, and at noon ate heartily. About mittee last night, when the account of 1:30 he left his work, complaining of Contractor Grant was presented for the pains in his head, and was assisted balance due on the construction of the to the Fraser House, where he had Evergreen avenue sewer. Therefore, ed a hypodermic injection of morphine. Mr. Burke kept watch over the sick man, and about four o'clock the job. The section of sewer had been ministered more morphine, as another convulsion had set in. About 6 p.m. Mr. Cummings was again attacked, and Mr. Burke noticed the sick man sink ing rapidly, and at 8:30 telephoned for the doctor, but when the latter arrived Mr. Cummings was beyond human aid. He was unconscious the greater part of the time after going to the hotel, and the last words he spoke in his defirium were: "O Lord, prepare a crown for me.

The deceased had been employed at Laidlaw & Watson's factory since its establishment, and was highly esteem ed both by employers and employes. He was a man of sterling character. A sad circumstance connected with his death is that he leaves a wife and wo young children at Dornoch, a village about nine miles north of Inger soll. Mrs. Cummings was sent a telegram early last night, asking her to ome to London, and a short time afterwards this message was followed by another conveying the sad intelligence that Mr. Cummings was dead. Cummings was engaged in packing up, as she was to have removed to this city, where Mr. Cummings had last week rented a house.

Dr. Hodge will hold a post-mortem to ascertain the cause of death, which e believes ensued as a result of apoplexy of the brain. Miss Robertson, of Thames street, is a sister-in-law of the deceased, and was greatly shocked when the sad news was brought to her last night.
