Opening of Grace Church.
The new English church at Ilderton is now finished and will be opened to-morrow, Rev. Canon Davis, of London, preaching in the morning. Rev. Mr. Shaw, Lucas, in the afternoon, and Rev. R. Wilson, Birr, in the evening.

The church interior is novel, and is exceedingly handsome. It will accommo-date about 200 people, although it is ex-pected that a far larger number than that will be present at each of the opening ser-vices, as owing to the kindness of the neighboring pastors and the friendly feel-ing existing among the different con-gregations, some of the neighboring churches have been closed for the occasion. The harvest home dinner and entertainment in connection with the church opening to be held on the following Wednesday evening promises likewise to be a decided suc-cess, as a very choice programme is to be rendered and an excellent dinner served.

A WONDERFUL MAN

Visit to the City of Rev. John G. Paton, D.D.

One Who Labors in the Center of Cannibalism.

He Relates Some of His Terrible Experiences in the New Hebrides—40,000 Cannibals on the Islands—The Streams Red with Human Blood—The Grand Work the Missionaries are Doing.

There arrived in this city to-day, and is now the guest of Rev. J. A. Murray, a remarkable man. His name is John G. Paton, and he is a missionary of the far-away islands of New Hebrides in the Southern Pacific Ocean. He is a distinguished delegate to the Pan-Presby-terian Council meeting in Toronto, and to-morrow morning and evening will preach in St. Andrew's Church. He will also speak at a mass meeting in Knox Church, North London, Sunday afternoon and de-liver an address in St. James' Presbyterian Church, Monday evening.

Mr. Paton's appearance is noble and patriarchal. His hair is thick, rather long, and whiter than wool. Most every one who has seen him has said "what singu-larly beautiful hair," and to many have occurred the passage about such hair receiv-ing homage, the wearer being found in the story of the patriarchs.

It is a wonderful career he has had. The story of his life reads like fiction. For 34 years he has been laboring among the cannibals of New Hebrides. Many times he has been driven out. He has had to fly from his bed under the island palms at night and seek refuge in the recesses of the tropical forest. Other missionaries have been shot down or thrust through with spears about him and afterward eaten, but he has in some strange manner always escaped.

He does not understand how it is himself. The old gentleman was the son of a stocking manufacturer in Scotland, and sailed to the New Hebrides from Melbourne in the John Knox. Anyone will know he is a Presbyterian from that. He was a young man then and unknown, but now he has D. D. attached to his name, and he is mission agent of his church for all Australasia. But because of these and other distinctions he is not to be understood that he has in any degree ceased his mission work. That lies closest to him, and just now he is on a journey to his old home in Scotland to tell about it. He is capable of doing it, for he has been married twice, and has four children. He is all out up into clans there, and inhabi-tants of one island do not speak the same tongue that the others do. When he first entered the islands he only knew a few words of the native language. Ten of them are utterly barbaric now. Cannibalism is practiced there just as it was 35 years ago, and human life is just as unsafe.

In July last a few brief lines reached this country, as all newspaper readers know, re-lating the natives of Tanna, one of the most beautiful of the cannibal islands, had killed and eaten several men. Mr. Paton is conversant with all the particu-lars.

"They were inconsiderately put off there from the ship Para, from Melbourne," he said to a reporter. "It was a terrible mis-take. The natives sprang upon them, killed them, cooked and ate them at once. It is a fearful condition of things, but only what might have been expected. I was what might have been expected. I was myself driven from Tanna after I had taught there three years."

Mr. Paton is one of all the missionaries who has in a measure broken down the barriers. He thinks he has been Christianized 20 of the 30 islands.

"When I went there," he said, "not a word could be understood of the many languages of the New Hebrides cannibals, nor could they understand a word of Eng-lish. My first impressions drove me to the verge of utter despair. Exertion and ter-ror were depicted on the faces of the two or three Europeans with me, and I am certain on my own. Feathers were in the twisted hair of the natives. Their faces were painted red, black and white. Some had one cheek black, the other red, their hair brown and white and the chin blue.

"There were warring tribes then as now. In a few moments there was the clash of clubs and spears and the discharge of rude weapons, intermixed with wild cries.

"At length I sent a boy to get water for our tea. After a while of great anxiety on our part he returned, saying: 'This is a dark land. The people of this place do dark works. At the boiling spring they have cooked and feasted upon the slain. They have washed the blood into the stream. They have bathed there till the waters are red. I cannot get water to make your tea.'

"That was my introduction to the New Hebrides. From that time I have been here ever since been my island home. I might as well have been stricken dumb. One day I observed two natives, the one lifting up one of my articles to the other and saying, 'Nunski nari en?' I con-sidered that the word was 'What is this?' Instantly lifting a piece of wood I said, 'Nunski nari en.' They smiled and spoke to each other. I understood them to be saying, 'He has got hold of our language now.' Then they told me their name for the thing I had pointed to. I repeated the questions, pointing to various things and carefully noting their answers down, spell-ing always phonetically. It was in this way, after very close observation and long-continued labor, that I learned one lan-guage after another.

"There are 40,000 cannibals there yet, however, and I am hoping from them till they are Christianized. The island of Aniwa, my home, is one of the smallest in the group. It is only eight miles long. It has but 370 people and all are Christians. I estimate that there are now 13,000 Christians on the 20 of the 30 islands. There are now eighteen missionaries and 200 native assistants there.

"On the ten cannibal islands there isn't a missionary and the Bible present state things nobody dare go there. I have been on all those. Life is at a very low ebb there. It is very unsafe. Cannibalism is practiced right along. It is fearful. It is just as it was when I went to Aniwa. There people were very bold and lawless, and the smoke of their sacrifices was to be seen almost any time.

"I had to fly many times, and my few companions who went with me to teach them were killed and eaten. I escaped. I know scarcely how, except by divine guidance. This shall be my work till I die. Then others will take up the work I have begun.

"The islands are extremely beautiful. Yams, bananas, coconuts, pineapples, and many other tropical fruits grow there. And Indian corn—I introduced that. It grows and thrives wonderfully well. Here is the land of the lotus eaters. Nothing can sur-pass the beauty of the islands, the soft air, and the clear moonlit nights. But the can-nibalism—that is terrible.

The venerable missionary, now 70 years old, has written a number of books telling of his toilsome work in the islands, which have considerable circulation, and may be found in many libraries. One of these, his latest, exceedingly well printed, bears the title, "John G. Paton, Missionary to the New Hebrides."

BOTH KNEW LARRY.

Coincidence in the History of Two Colored Women in St. Louis.
Two colored women were walking down Market street yesterday evening. One of them carried a large basket of clothes. They were strangers to each other, but the basket became so heavy that the woman stopped until the other came up and asked her to assist her for a square or two. As they pursued their way the woman with the basket, by the way of bringing up a conversation, asked the name of her com-panion.

"Larry? That's my name, too," was the reply. Further questioning revealed the fact that the woman lived in the same neighborhood, near Eleventh and Market streets, and when they arrived at that corner the woman with the basket invited the other to accompany her home. They were sitting in the house talking when a colored man entered. He seemed confused at the sight of the woman.

"Mrs. Larry, this is my husband," said one.
"Why, he's my husband; you are mis-taken," was the reply.

In a moment the women were on the point of fighting, when the man suddenly ran out. The women left alone soon learned that both were married to the same man, John Larry. They produced their marriage licenses and placed them in the hands of Officers Ferguson and Brown, who last evening arrested Larry on the charge of bigamy. The licenses show that he married Betty Allen at Hardtown in 1890, and Carrie Johnston in 1891. They had married but a square apart for several months. [Courier-Journal.]

In the west window of Spittal, Burn & Gentleman, Dundas street, may be seen a fine display of the Featherbone corsets. They have the advantage of being so much admired at the Western Fair last week.

Rev. Mr. Tyke (at the christening, for-gotten of the date)—Let me see, this is the thirteenth. Proud Father—Good heavens! no! It is only the eleventh.
