The Local Campaign. candidate of its own in sight to cheer for, can only throw cheap sneers at Mr.

The member for London is one of the busiest of public men. During the late session he was chairman of the redistribution committee, presided over the railway committee of the House of Commons, and toward the end took over the administration of the public works department, while Mr. Suther land was in search of better health These manifold duties have left Mr. Hyman little time for his home and private affairs, and none at all for horse races and pink teas, if he had heen so inclined. While private members have been free to join their families at intervals, and even enjoy the pleasures of the Woodbine, Mr. Hyman has been slaving at his desk, inspecting the various public works under his temporary charge, and economizing time by attending to his heavy correspondence while on his travels. If he had been less conscientious and had shirked his public duties, he might have seen more of his constituents and given more attention to his private business.

Our contemporary is not well-advised in jeering at Mr. Hyman for his ener getic habits. These have won him rapid advancement in the public service, and the appreciation of the citizens of Lon. don without regard to party. Were it not for the appearance of the thing and its moral effect upon the country, many of the leading Conservatives of the city would favor his re-election by acclamation. They have no stomach for a fight which they know to be hopeless-with an opponent whom they respect and admire. The Free Press is trying to inject personal bitterness into the campaign, but no such feeling can be There is nothing picayune or revengeful in Mr. Hyman; he has always main. tained cordial relations with his political opponents, and been a fellow-citizen first and a partisan afterwards.

Laurier's English ideals. Hamilton OPENING SHOTS are just now in a quandary over the choice of a candidate to oppose him, but Liberals can apreciate their difficulty, and have no wish to add to it by taunts ference on trade matters. Why no praiseworthy sentiment, and it demands that someone shall bear the Conservative standard at considerable self-sacrifice. Whoever he may be, it is to be hoped the campaign will be free from personalities, and will be fought out on the broad issues before the public.

Laurier's "English Ideals."

Le Journal, of Montreal, the Conservative organ, declares that Sir Wilfrid Laurier failed to make an impression upon his audience at Sorel. failure due to the absence of warmth in his language, which Le Journal attributes to his "English associations and English ideals."

This is a variant of Sir Charles Tupper's famous verdict (rendered in Quebec): "Laurier is too British for me." It is the sort of thing Laurier had to contend with in his own province in the last two general elections and will have to contend with again.

While the Francophobe journals in this Province accuse the Premier of appealing to the race consciousness of his compatriots, the leader of the Quebec wing of the Conservative party. Bleu newspapers complain that the interests and the influence of Quebec the national councils have been subordinated by the Premier in his street," growled the suitor anxiety to placate the English-speaking people. Verily the way of the peacemaker is hard.

Sir Wilfrid is strong in his own province because of his personality and because of his lineage. The French-Canadians are naturally proud of him as one of themselves, but he is as a special favor if the fellow who is not in their minds an expression of race aspirations which are at variance would like to get some of the same with national unity. The irrefutable kind so that she will come home to be frid has triumphed over appeals to sectarian prejudice in his own province. novement among the French-Canadians it would not be behind Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whose life work has been a bride of statuesque pose, gowned in
