Bambuk, though a Mohammedan and a foulah, was no longer a fighting man. He had waxed fat and prosperous, and he waited now for death with the fatalism he had displayed ever since he knew for certain that the men of Oku were bent on looting Kadana.

Evelyn, leaning against the door, with every faculty on the alert for the slightest indication of Warden's welfare, nevertheless let her mind stray in the most bewildering manner. She was devoid of fear. If given her choice, she would be out there in the thick of the struggle, using her puny strength on behalf of the man she loved. Instead, she was condemned to inaction. They would never have per-mitted an advance in force if they were not certain of their ability to overpower the weak detachment of Hausas at the irst rush. In a sense, it was Evelyn's presence which brought about this decision. Their Portuguese ally had made such a point of her capture uninjured that they wished to gratify him, while there were other forcible reasons why they should not waste too many hours

THE MERRY BLINDMAN

[By Sui Sin Far.] The littlest finger on Ah Yen's little left hand was very sore. Ah Yen had poked it into a hot honey tart. His honorable mother had said: "Yen, you must not touch that tart," but just as soon as his honorable mother had left the room, Yen forgot what she had said, and thrust the littlest finger of his little left hand right into the softest, sweetest and hottest part of

Now he sat beside the window, feeling very sad and sore, for all the piece of oiled white linen which his mother had carefully wrapped around his little finger. It was a very happy oking day. The sky was a lovely blue, trimmed with pretty soft white clouds, and on the purple lilac tree which stood in frost of his father's cottage, two little yellow eyebrows were chirping to each other.

But Yen, with his sore finger, did not feel at all happy. You see, if his finger had not been sore, he could have been spinning the bright-colored top which his honorable uncle had given him the day before.

Isn't it a lovely day, little son? ealled his mother. "I think it is a homely day," ans-

"See those good little birds on tree," said his mother. "I don't believe they are good," re-

"Fie for shame!" cried his mother and she went on with her work. Just then an old blind man carrying a guitar came down the street. His left arm encircled Colville's limp body, and in his right hand was a gun-barrel from which the stock had been broken off. In his Arab costume, travel-soiled and blood-stained, he looked the incarnation of fearsome war, while the seemingly lifeless form he carried added a note of horror to his appalling aspect.

Mrs. Katchell Sufface, From Bruit agonized cries of the negroes drowned all other sounds. Evelyn thought she heard Warden addressing some order to the Hausas, but she could not be sure. Hume, in whom the man was rapidly supplanting the missioner, wished to take a personal share in the defence, but his wife clung to him in an agony of terror, and implored him not to leave her. While trying to soothe the distracted woman he reflected that he would probably prove more of a hindrance than otherwise in the fighting line. If he used a gun at all it must be as a cudgel, for he did not even understand the mechanism of the breech-block.

"I fear it is all up with us, sweetheart," he said. "I don't think Colville is dead, but it is only a matter of seconds for him and the rest of us. Have you a revolver? Give me that lamp. It may help a little. Under this low roof we cannot distinguish friend from foe."

He spoke so gently, with such well-balanced modulation, that he might have been standing at the door of some peaceful villa overlooking the Thames, with no more serious purport in his words than to light the way for a guest. But a rush and a furious melee on the stairs showed what manner of guest might be expected, and that ominous question anent a revolver was lost on Evelyn. Hume took Colville into his arms, and Warden, without waiting for the lamp-turned to reinforce the five men who now held the enemy at bay.

The girl, with a Berserk courage worthy of her ancestry, snatched up the lamp and ran with it to the verandah. Attached to a pillar at the head of the stairs was a bracket on which a light

He had seldom seen a white woman, and had seldom seen a white woman, and never one in any way resembling Evelyn.

To his untutored mind she was a spirit.

Though a fresh outburst of firing startled her highly strung nerves she felt somewhat of a thrill of supernatural awa at the fancy that the carved image of the by-gone King of Benin had forced its way back to the actual locality in which its human prototype had ruled millions of those very men who were now clamoring for the lives of herself and her companions.

It was a strange notion, and it dominated her for a moment to the exclusion of all else. Could it be possible that there were subtle forces at work of whose existence she was wholly unsavare? Had these unhappy blacks some power at command which was denied to those who lorded it over them? Of late she had read a good de... concerning the supposed origin of Obi rites in West African fetish-worship.
