We have heard a great deal about the power of education to improve public morality, but as Herbert Spencer has shown in his social science, unless moral training of the emotions can be given slong with the education of the intellect no improvement in public morals is to be expected. For it is not likely the knowledge of what is right and what is wrong that prompts a person to prefer the former to the latter. It is true that criminal statistics show that ality, but as Herbert Spencer has shown in It is true that criminal statistics show that Quebec or any othe province any a large proportion of criminals can not read nor write. But this may be quite accidental and have no more to do with their criminal habits than any other facts which would welcome Outario, Manitoba and British Columbia with open arms, but he would not have Ouebec on any terms. criminal habits than any other facts which statisticians might tabulate. Indeed when no moral training is given to the emotions, it is quite to be expected that the criminal classes will increase in numbers and skill. Take a savage and set him in the midst of our civilization. He is hungry and steals a loaf. We teach him a lesson, we send him to jail. He comes out, goes to school, learns to write well, commits forgery. Again we teach him a lesson, the penitentiary. He is released, he enters business, he learns all the means of keeping within tiary. He is released, he enters business, he learns all the means of keeping within the law and yet of cheating society. His immorality has now received its finishing touch from an intellectual training which does not educate the moral capacity. How is this to be done. There is the sunday school. Very good, but we want a training that extends to every day in the week instead of to one. And our opinion of sunday schools, very excellent things as we believe them to be, is that they do not give any systematic moral training. The dogmas of the church, the histories of soripture, the biography of men and women who lived for the most part under social conditions very different from ours, form the staple of Sunday school teaching.

The proposition is that a manual of morals based on the conception that what is on the whole, calculated to promote human harmings in morally word a business and the remedy and means of moral training, and infinitely more to the wealth; noulafine, and infinitely more to the wealth; noulafine of Ontario and infinitely more to the wealth; noulafine, and in the committee of Ontario and the city of the territory and insist on the canal' is on the whole, calculated to promote human happiness, is morally good, should be a text-book in the schools. It would impress the imagination and emotion of children with high ideals of duty, it would most part a transcript of the English church's catechism, and was besides dull to his views of the Northwest, and I as a To the and uninteresting.

"STRANGE VERDICTS,"

(To the Editor of The World.) SIR: Your editorial of to day on the verdict in the case of John Albert is timely. It would be a diagrace indeed to the community were the sentence of death passed upon him fulfilled. So reckless, unreasoning a case of manslaughter is cer tainly a crime which society at present can tainly a crime which society at present can hardly afford to condone; but how any jury could convict of deliberate murder on the evidence brought out at the trial is difficult to conceive. There should either be a move for a new trial in a district remote from the scene of the incident, or else a petition should be got up and presented asking a commutation of the sentence to a limited term of imprisonment.
