THE SAND-MAN.

Oh! how does the Sand-man come. On! now does the Sand-man go?
And how does the Sand-man go?
Does he drop from the sky like a cloud possile drop from the say like a count at night, poss he walk through the streets in broad day light To visit the high and low?

oh! what does the sand man do, And why is the sand man here? pos he carry a sack on his little round while he scatters the sand with a lavish $\frac{nand}{To \left(\mathrm{eff} \right) us}$ that sleepy time's here?

Oh) my dear cuildren, nobody knows llow the Sand-man comes and the Sand-man goes;

Farthough we may wish very much for When the sand-man comes we shut our eyes tight.

Columbus and Henry VII.

Columbus had made three several voyages to America before the discovery of Canada under the auspices of the King of England. In his first voyage he reached land at the Bahama Islands. In the second voyage in 1498 he visited the Carribbean Islands, Jamaica, and Porto Rico, and in the third voyage in 1498 he coasted the Southern continent from the Bay of Honduras to the Gulf of Darien.

His last voyage was made four years later. The prodigious acquisitions made in the newly-found Western World by the great Discoverer under the charter from Ferdinand and Isabella soon aroused the attention and the avaricious envy of the other nations of Europe. When Columbus has shown the way, the marinces of every European seaboard were ready to undertake similar voyages and were clamouring for Government au-thority and aid, such as the Queenly

Isabella had given Columbus. Henry

VII. now regretted his having refused the offer of Columbus, which Isabella had so promptly and munificantly accepted, and on the 5th of March, 1400, signed a patent in favour of John or Giovanni Cabot, a Venetian merchant residing in England, and his son Sobas-tiano, still in his minority, an horising them to seek out, subdue, and o cupy in the King's name, at their own charges,
