

far designed procedures to protect confidential information were generally felt to be sufficient to protect unauthorized access to such data. Some of the information so categorized as confidential would not have to be incorporated into the inspection report, and would have to remain on the facility premises.

4. Summary and preliminary conclusions

The participants in the exercise strongly felt a necessity to maintain confidentiality of information for the conduct of the exercise. The participants in the exercise strongly felt a necessity to maintain confidentiality of information for the conduct of the exercise. The participants in the exercise strongly felt a necessity to maintain confidentiality of information for the conduct of the exercise.

It was possible in laboratory experiments and in the course of the exercise to maintain confidentiality of information for the conduct of the exercise. The participants in the exercise strongly felt a necessity to maintain confidentiality of information for the conduct of the exercise.

The participants in the exercise strongly felt a necessity to maintain confidentiality of information for the conduct of the exercise. The participants in the exercise strongly felt a necessity to maintain confidentiality of information for the conduct of the exercise.

The participants in the exercise strongly felt a necessity to maintain confidentiality of information for the conduct of the exercise. The participants in the exercise strongly felt a necessity to maintain confidentiality of information for the conduct of the exercise.