SAURDAY MORNING, OCT. 30.

The Whole Study of Medicine

In the current issue of the Canadian Journal of Medicine and Surgery the position of the regular professional men is set forth in their relation to the claims of the new schools which desire to be licensed or to practice without license if licenses are refused.

We suspect, however, that the allusion is to the osteopaths, who are mentioned elsewhere in the article, and to other quack healers belonging to various religious bodies.

The contention is in another part of the article is that osteopaths should be placed on the same level as nurses, who, while they are thoroughly acquainted with the mechanical means of cure, never use them on their own responsibility, but rely on the advice of a diplomated physician to do what he thinks necessary or perhaps what the nurse thinks necessary if the doctor is young and the nurse has the experience.

There is one conclusion, however, which The Journal voices, to which there should be no dissent, since it embodies the contentions of the intelligent men of all schools and is sufficiently wide to cover all contingencies, perhaps even a little wider than The Journal is prepared to sanction, for if it applies to one school it must apply to all.

With the aim of The Journal and of the practitioners generally, an aim which is the assumed basis of the whole agitation, the protection of the public, we have the fullest sympathy.

Grand old Hippocrates and his disciples established the rule of taking no fees at all, and it is still a professional fiction in some countries that the true physician accepts no fees, but relies on the gratitude and generosity of his surviving patients.

"Shooting the Bull" There will be hearty agreement with Sir Sam Hughes by all who understand the situation on his advice about talking to men who are wanted for the army. The abusive, humiliating tone of many speakers, he said, drove men away rather than attracted them to the colors.

At the same time we cannot conceive of anything more necessary than to keep the urgent need of more men before the general public. There are always men at leisure who would be better in the army at this time serving their country and their own best interests than anywhere else.

The young men, the sports, are not to be found at meetings of this kind. They have a grievous objection to what they call "bull," which may be interpreted as palaver, and men like the parsons, who live by palaver, place an undue value upon it.

One good omen can enlist a company. A leader in sport anywhere can gather in his following in the most astonishing way. A University battery was made up in this fashion, but recruiting was retarded afterwards because the promise that the men would be kept together was not observed.

The chum spirit and the good fellowship which counts so much afterwards in esprit de corps, has not been sufficiently exploited. Every locality has its group of young men and if they were properly appealed to they will come in in companies.

Property More Important Another protest has been sent by President Wilson to Great Britain. It is, like former ones, a protest against the grievous treatment that property is receiving at the hands of the British. We may trust that as Mr. Wilson shows no signs of going to war with Germany over the Lusitania, or the Arabic and the death of American citizens at the hands of the Kaiser, he will not go to war with Britain over the shipping regulations.

He appears to be imbued with the spirit of British common law, which in practice visits offences against property with great severity, but in the case of offences against the person is willing to leave vengeance to the Lord. A man may kick his wife to death and only get six months in jail at the hands of a British magistrate, but if he steals fifty cents worth he is likely to get five years penitentiary.

The Men Who Are Still Needed If peace were in prospect for next month, or next week, or for tomorrow, it would be no excuse for slackening upon the preparations for war. The enemy is not beaten and will not be beaten until he lays down his arms and sues for peace. He is not at that stage nor anywhere near that stage yet, but he is headed in that direction.

With the aim of The Journal and of the practitioners generally, an aim which is the assumed basis of the whole agitation, the protection of the public, we have the fullest sympathy.

Grand old Hippocrates and his disciples established the rule of taking no fees at all, and it is still a professional fiction in some countries that the true physician accepts no fees, but relies on the gratitude and generosity of his surviving patients.

MR. CANUCK: To the front? Yes, and speed up, Sam.

It is rumored in military circles that the militia authorities will keep in force all winter the order prohibiting soldiers from drinking in hotels.
