

evitably arise before all the Learning is settled, that may be necessary to understand such Modes of Collection, as being partly external, and partly internal, may in the Language of Metaphysicians be styled MIXED MODES.

If it be a sufficient Objection to a new Tax, that it can't be raised without a new Mode of Collection, there is an end of Taxing.

I can't conclude this Head without observing that the Objection under Consideration is contrary to the most approved Maxims. That it makes the Right, depend upon the
