RECRUITING NOTICE—15TH HEAVY BATTERY
Get ready for the next war—don't wait for conscription. This battery is now drilling on Tuesday and Thursday nights with a mere handful of men. It would be 125, with a large waiting list. A fine chance is offered to the older boys of the numerous cadet corps to learn how to shoot a big gun. Men with actual experience will show you how to do it. A week of real shooting in the summer at Petawawa, on the Ottawa River, follows the summer training in the army. Come down and have a look at the guns, and you can tell better whether you wish to join or not. C. F. INCHES, Major. 16898-12-14

LIQUOR FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA INTO ALASKA.
Washington, Dec. 8.—(By Canadian Press)—Liquor is finding its way into Alaska Territory from British Columbia, according to the annual report of the Department of the Interior which was issued yesterday. Evidently the enforcement of prohibition in the far northern state is a difficult matter. Not only are supplies of Canadian liquors being sold by bootleggers, but according to the report, "distillation processes are becoming well-known."

The governor recommends more liberality in the law in the case of liquor for medicinal purposes, the report states, adding: "During the epidemics of influenza doctors were frantically endeavoring to procure whiskey for their patients seriously ill with pneumonia, and it is claimed that many lives could have been saved had whiskey been available during the emergency."

WOMEN JURORS WEEP.
Erie, Pa., Dec. 8.—A coroner's jury of women wept when they returned a verdict holding Martin C. Corneli, city editor, responsible for the death of William Schultz, who was killed by an automobile. Corneli's defense was that he was home at the time of the accident.

SOCIALIZATION IN AUSTRIA

Failure of Experiment and Return to Private Ownership.

(Correspondence N. Y. Evening Post.)
Vienna, Nov. 12.—During the first year of the republic the middle classes left the power almost entirely in the hands of the Socialists, being convinced that they alone could prevail upon the exasperated masses to refrain from violence, and from imitating the fatal example of Russia. The Socialists have justified this confidence, but it is not surprising that the radical section of the party, seeing the immense power which had all at once fallen into its hands, should have resolved to try all sorts of experiments, and above all to realize the idea of socialization. It was not possible to take things in hand after the manner of the Bolsheviks, but socialization in parts and by degrees could be attempted, and this was done.

The two branches of industry which the apostles of socialization have in mind above all others, the coal mines and the railways, were altogether out of the question. New Austria, such as Saint Germain had made it, owned no coal mines worth mentioning, and the railways had, with a single exception, been owned by the state for a great many years, and did not therefore need to be socialized. Next in importance came Austria's enormous, hitherto unemployed, water power, and the extensive war industries and these were taken in hand. As much of the war industry was owned by the state, so that it was transformed into industrial concerns serving the purposes of peace.

Theoretically, the exploitation of the water-power was undertaken with the utmost energy. A new government department was established, innumerable engineers were appointed, and a state secretary for socialization was created, who took the waterworks department under his wing. The first man appointed to this office was Dr. Otto Bauer, the result was deplorable beyond all expectation. According to the government budget for the financial year 1920-21, the industrial concerns of the state, estimated to be worth $67,000,000 crowns of invested capital, employing 100,000 workmen and 2,000 officials and engineers, were expected to bring receipts to the amount of $60,000,000 crowns, and to cause an expenditure of $46,000,000 crowns. The official deficit was estimated at $6,000,000 crowns, but reliable calculations show that the deficit will not be less than $30,000,000 crowns. This disastrous result is in part justified by the fact that there have been heavy expenses for new works, new organization, and investments for transforming the production of war goods to those of peace. But on the other hand the raw material was put down in the accounts at the price paid for it years ago. As the raw material is stock hoarded by the government during the war, or for a still longer time, it has been obtained at prices which seem ridiculous at the present time.

Already negotiations are being carried on for selling the state industrial concern.

who will be remembered as the Republic's minister of foreign affairs. His successor was the Socialist Viennese physician, Dr. Ellenbogen. A great number of plans for the exploitation of Austria's water-power were worked out, some good, some bad, but they all had the same fate—they remained plans drawn on paper. It was soon discovered that Austria was much too poor to find the means to build the necessary works, and that no foreign capitalist would ever be found who would risk his money in a concern intended from the first to be socialized. Nearly two years were spent in theoretical discussions, and quite recently it has been decided that a very small portion of the imposing plans should be realized, namely, the building of the works for transforming the Aibling railway into an electric railway.

War Industries Taken Over.
The industrial concerns owned by the government were apparently in a much better situation from the first. They were already in existence, and had done great work during the entire war. All that seemed necessary was to copy private industry and adapt them to the work of peace. The experiment was tried and resulted in tremendous disappointment. The state lacked the merchant's talent for enterprises. The managers could not take the slightest risk, since public money was involved. For every financial measure they had to consult some officialdom, which put sudden resolution and the instantaneous seizing of a chance out of the question. The workers, relying on the real or hoped-for partisanship of their fellow Socialists in the government, interpreted the new social laws in their own way.

The parliament of each concern, called the working council (Betriebsrat) was not limited in its aspirations by the position of the proprietor, as is the case in private industry, but had the power to interfere even in the management. This council decided who was to be appointed and who was to be dismissed. The attempt to return to the system of payment in proportion to the work done, was stopped by the council with every means at its disposal. Every workman, good or bad, industrious or idle, in these manufacturing republics received the same ever-increasing payment, and could under almost no circumstances be given notice of dismissal.

Socialization Disastrous.
The result was deplorable beyond all expectation. According to the government budget for the financial year 1920-21, the industrial concerns of the state, estimated to be worth $67,000,000 crowns of invested capital, employing 100,000 workmen and 2,000 officials and engineers, were expected to bring receipts to the amount of $60,000,000 crowns, and to cause an expenditure of $46,000,000 crowns. The official deficit was estimated at $6,000,000 crowns, but reliable calculations show that the deficit will not be less than $30,000,000 crowns. This disastrous result is in part justified by the fact that there have been heavy expenses for new works, new organization, and investments for transforming the production of war goods to those of peace. But on the other hand the raw material was put down in the accounts at the price paid for it years ago. ENGLAND RECOVERS RAPIDLY.
England is recovering from the effects of the war more rapidly than any other European country, according to Lieut. Col. J. Pierce of Los Angeles, who has just returned from overseas. He says that despite labor and political troubles there is a spirit of patriotism in England that is evidenced by the efforts of people of all classes in their efforts to restore the empire to its position of pre-war predominance.
