DON'T BE BALD

Nearly Everyone May Secure a Splendid Growth of Hair

I have a remedy that has aided to grow hair and prevented baldness in 83 out of 100 cases where used according to directions for a reasonable length of time. That may seem like a strong statement, but it is, and I mean to prove it. I have no doubt it will do for you if it does for me. I am an actual bald man.

I am so certain that my hair will grow that I have written a book, "The Bald Man's Guide," which I will give you free of charge if you will send me your name and address. It is a small book, but it contains all the information you need to know about the treatment of baldness. It is written in plain, simple language, and is easy to read. It is a real treat for the bald man.

Recall that my hair is as thick and as black as ever. I am a bald man, and I have no doubt it will do for you if it does for me. I am an actual bald man.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By RUTH CAMERON

I AM a young girl who has recently become engaged. My fiancé is just splendid and is exceptionally good to me in almost every way. He is very attentive, thoughtful and generous in almost every respect, but he does just one thing I do not quite like. Several times since we became engaged he has been off to the theatre by himself or with other men. Now you think that is right? It seems to me that he ought to take me whenever he goes to the theatre. What do you think about it?

So questions one of my young letter friends.

Poor, foolish little girl. Is it that you don't like your fiancé to go off with his friends once in a while for a masculine good time? It almost seems to me that must be the trouble.

Now, little girl, suppose you bring out, far and near, into use some of that quality which engaged people so often use carefully hidden away; namely, your common sense. In the first place, take you to the theatre three or four times a week? If you do, it is not too good when he takes you. Therefore, he might feel that he could afford to go to the theatre three or four times a week, or a dollar or one when he could not afford to go to the theatre three or four times a week. There are evenings, presumably, when he does not come to see you. Isn't it natural that he should want something interesting and absorbing to take up his mind and bridge over the cruel separation?

It seems to me that the girl who is discontented and jealous when her fiancé goes off with his friends once in a while for a masculine good time is making a great mistake. He is giving her a proof of the fact that she has drawn the very best kind of man, a man who likes the crowd and is liked by them. The woman who is discontented, instead of delighted at such a proof, is foolish, but she who lets the man ever suspect her discontent and jealousy is doubly so. Remember, my dear, and any of your sisters who may have been piqued at finding that their fiancé could have a jolly time without them occasionally, remember that in love the tie that binds is always the tie that galls and often the tie that breaks.

Perhaps you folks will think I'm queer, but I simply can't see that complete independence in a pair of lovers is any guarantee for happiness. It seems to me that the man who has the fullest, completest, lives apart will be the two who will be the happiest in union because they will not wear that union out by seeing too much of it.

Don't let me crush out as much as you can of his individual, separate life and interests. Be thankful for every one that he has. Sympathize with them and share them as far as he likes to have you, but beyond that leave him free and untrammelled by suspicion or discontent, to enjoy himself as a man in a man's way. Believe me, if you do you will have your reward in finding that you have a much finer, happier man than one whose interests were hidebound by yours.

La MARQUISE de FONTENOY

The Tweeddale Family Rich in Superstitions — The Story of the Pear — One of Bank of England Founders

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company.)

The new and eleventh Marquis of Tweeddale, whose name should be pronounced "Tweed," if it were spelt "Twiddle," visited America last year, under the name and courtesy of the Earl of Glenfarg, the Pennington Cup of the Lords of Muncaster and the Lee Penny of the Lockharts, which Sir Walter Scott has made the subject of one of his most popular novels, "The Talsman," the Marquis of Tweeddale is known alternately as the Colston Pear, or the Yester Pear. The Sir Hugh de Gifford of "Marmion," had an only daughter, Joanna. She married Sir Thomas de Gifford, Lord of Colston, and it is in this way that Yester came into the possession of the great Scotch house of Hay, who, when the Lord Tweeddale was a young man, were the lords of the Tweeddale. On the occasion of this marriage, old Sir Hugh placed a pear from his orchard into the hands of the young couple, and it was kept intact their descendants would prosper. More than 200 years ago, the third Lord Hay, of Yester, cared so little for his only son and heir and was so deeply attached to his daughter, Joanna, who married George Brown of Colston (ancestor of the Brown baronets of Colston, and of the French peerage of Comte de Colston) that he bequeathed to her the famous pear which thus passed from the hands of the Hay family. From the Hay family, the pear passed to the hands of the Dalrymple family, and it was in this way that the Dalrymple family came into possession of the pear. In the reign of Charles I, one of the women of the Dalrymple family, a bit of a piece out of the pear, with the result that the Dalrymple family was also taken over by misfortune.

Through the marriage of Miss Christian Brown, only child and sole heiress of Charles Brown of Colston, the pear which by this time had become known as the Yester Pear, but as the Colston Pear, came into the hands of her husband, the ninth Earl of Dalhousie, and Sir Walter Scott, in his "Diary," describes having seen and handled the pear, and he has also the additional name of Newton, on account of the Newton Hall property. Willing that the pear should remain in the hands of the Dalrymple family, the ninth Earl of Dalhousie, in his will, bequeathed the pear to the House of Lords. The whole affair is more a matter of Scottish legend than of actual facts, and this being the case, it is doubtful whether old William Hay-Newton of Newton Hall, who is not particularly rich, will care to risk the big expense, amounting probably to some $100,000 or $200,000, which would be needed to push his more than doubtful claims.

The estate of the late Marquis of Tweeddale, in addition to the possession of which Lord Tweeddale has come through the death of his father, extend over 40,000 acres in England and Scotland, and they include Yester, a wonderful place in Haddingtonshire which was already accounted very old when King Alexander III, of Scotland, in 1283 visited Sir Hugh de Gifford in his castle of Yester, to take counsel with him how to overthrow the Norwegian invaders.

Immortalized by Scott

This historic interview bore fruit in the defeat which overtook the Norwegian King Hakon and his army and Sir Walter Scott has immortalized the interview between Alexander III and Sir Hugh de Gifford at Yester Castle in his poem "Marmion."

This Sir Hugh, from whom the new Marquis of Tweeddale is descended, was celebrated as a nervous man and is asserted to have created with one stroke of his magic wand the so-called Goblin Hall of the old castle of Yester—not to be confused with the relatively new castle, close by. Goblin Hall, though the remainder of the castle has fallen into ruin, still exists, a huge stone vaulted and roomy chamber with an immense fireplace at the farther end, and a well of unfathomable depth in one corner of the chamber. A portion is apparently left over from the castle founded with the relatively new castle, close by. Sir Hugh, when Sir Walter Scott describes in his "Marmion," as "the dread of warlock of Gifford," and as "the 25th Knight," is believed throughout Scotland to have placed a spell upon the Goblins.

OPPOSITION WALK OUT

Scene of Intense Excitement Over Vote on Insurance Bill Amendment

London, Nov. 30.—There was a remarkable scene in the House of Commons tonight when the government applied the guillotine to 470 amendments in the spirit of the insurance bill.

Andrew Bonar Law, leader of the opposition, heatedly accused the ministers of acting in obedience to the Redmondian rule of floating parliament in order to clear the road for Home Rule for Ireland.

David Lloyd George, the champion of the exchequer, as hotly replied that the government was only following the example set by Unionist governments.

The excitement was intense and the members faced the prospect of a discussion on such an amendment when, on the speaker putting the first amendment, the entire opposition rose and made a dramatic exit from the chamber pursued by derisive ministerial cheering.

Then in a dreary monotone the speaker began formally putting the amendments and when he became fatigued the deputy speaker relieved him. The entire 470 amendments were adopted and by 11 o'clock the first amendment, the entire opposition rose and made a dramatic exit from the chamber pursued by derisive ministerial cheering.
