

From dust to dust at 139

ENS The world's oldest woman, reputed to be 139, finally gave up the ghost this week in her native village of Kutol in the Caucasus mountains of the Soviet Union. Mrs. Khfaf Lasuria left only one relative, a son, aged 100. According to the Russian newspaper Tass, the world's oldest man died in 1973 at the age of 169.

Wanna buy an abortion?

Paris (ENS) - The French government has announced intentions to legalize abortion in that country, following years of determined struggle by feminists against heavy Catholic opposition.

Conditions for abortion under the plan will include the mental and physical health of the mother, financial hardship to the family, or possible deformity in the infant.

flamingos, zebras, giraffes, lions, baboons and many other animals out in the wild roaming at will.

All was not roses though. She felt sorry for the ordinary people (poor by our standards) that she saw walking along the sides of the road carrying heavy loads on their heads. However they always wore smiles and seemed to be happy.

Another sight that stuck in her mind as being not too pleasant was of an old dead elephant being torn limb from limb by a group of hungry lions.

The highlight of the tour more than compensated for this, though. This highlight was a stay at the new "Ark" hotel which as the name implies is built to resemble Noah's Ark.

This Ark, however, is built on stilts with just a watering hole surrounding it in the middle of a jungle.

"Whenever an animal came to the watering hole," recalls my friend, "they would buzz your room, twice for a rhino, once for an elephant, I think. They had different beeps for each animal."

After this came the ride back to Nairobi, Kenya and the long trip home... from over 85 degrees F. down to a chilly minus 25 degrees F. here.

All in all she says that she had the time of her life. Her next trip... "Well, I wouldn't mind going to Australia."

No, not all senior citizens have given up living just because they have a few more years of experience than the rest of us.
