The event of chief importance affecting the interests of the British army in the East ha been the retirement of General Simpson, and Codrington took charge, and was duly installed to-day. General Simpson has held the chief command of the army since the death of Field Marshal Lord Raglan, on the 28th of June last, when it devolved upon him in consequence of his being the next senior officer present in the field. His official appointment as Commanderin-Chief was not announced, however, to the army in the Crimea until the 21st of July following. It during the period which has since elapsed it has not been General Simpson's fortune to have his name associated with any brilliant achievement or illustrious success on the part of the force under his immediate direction. the final most arduous siege operations and glorious fall of Sebastopol; and while all agree that he has administered the internal economy of many changes in its organisation, with discretion, justice, and moderation, he has the satistaction of retiring from command without leav ing one enemy behind him. - C.
