WAKING AT NIGHT.

When I wake up alone at night,
I feel as if I had no eyes:
I stare and stare with all my might,
But only olackness round me lies.

I listen for the faintest sound,
And, though I strain with either ear,
The dark is silent all around;
It's just as if I could not hear.

But if I lie with limbs held fast A sort of sound comes like a sigh-Perhaps the darkness rushing past, Perhaps the minutes passing by.

Perhaps the thoughts in people's heads, That keep so quiet all the day, Wait till they're sleeping in their beds, Then rustle out and fly away!

Or else this noise like whirring wings That dies with the first streak of light May be the sound of baby things All growing, growing in the night, Children and kitty cats and pups, Daisies perhaps and buttercups, All growing in the midnight hours. And yet it seems of me a part,

And nothing far away of queer * * *
It's just the beating of my heart
That sounds so strange as I lie here!

I do not know why this should be; When darkness hides the world from eight if feel that all is gone but me—

A little child and the black night.

—Mabel Dearmer in Spectator.

SHE PREFERRED A MAN OF ACTION.

......... Landor was at his desk, which was pear the open window. The window looked down on the ponderous, overwhelming traffic of South Water street The grinding of huge wheels, the crashing of machinery, the clatter of hoof beats, the rattle of harness, the jarring of merchandise, the hoarse voices of porters and drivers, all rose in one mighty, mingled roar, a veritable bellow of commercial prosperity. Landor did not notice the turmoil. He had become accustomed to it many months ago. He was absorbed but not in his work. The minute hand had crawled quite around the dial of the big clock in the corner since he had formed a figure on the ledger lying open before him. But he had been writing. His gaze dropped to the page upon his desk. As he scanned the verse he had written his eyes took on the mingled dreaminess and sparkle one sees only in the orbs of a poet.

He drew from his desk a liftle glove pearl colored and perfumed. There was inspiration in the sight, the scent, the touch, of it. He laid it gently back, seized his pen and began on another stanza.

A brown hand reached over his shoulder. A couple of letters fell on the open ledger. One-the one in the firm, characteristic, feminine hand he had come to know-he tore open with fingers that were clumsy through baste. Two, four, closely written pages! Her notes to him heretofore had been of akmost telegraphic brevity. He plunged into the first page—had all but read it through, indeed, before he pausedthen jerked back his head as though he had received a shock. The letter had not been intended for

But it was for him. There was his name-his name in the writing of the woman he loved-to whom he had not dared to speak unless in sweet, wild verses which she never beheld. He had read so far unwittingly. He must now read the rest." After what he had ignorantly learned he must now learn more. It meant life and all that life held for him-the words which were traced on the next page-life and love or bitter and enduring disappointment:

My Dear Friend-When you asked me lately if Landor Aldrich should do me the honor to ask me to be his wife—would Emarry him—I gave you no reply. I will te. you now. I fear your opinion uld it be lightly formed. I dread lest you think me guilty of a vulgar caprice. I will be quite frank. I think he does care for me, and 1-There the page ended.

The dreaminess was gone from his eyes now. There was a red light in them. He dug his nails into his palms until the fierce pressure pained.

He turned the page. He read on: —well, I've never worn my heart on my sleeve, Eloise. I can't do it now. But you may draw from my silence what inference you will. "Mr. Aldrich!" He looked up. He was trembling like a leaf. "About that special shipment to the Philippines, "Yes-no! I don't know. Ask the elevator boy!" he muttered, not comprehending, and again bent over the fateful page. The man shrugged his shoulders and walked away. Landor read on: You spoke of his charming personality, his rare gifts of mind and spirit. Who should appreciate these more than I, who have known him so well? That one of such social standing, appearance and hereditary wealth should have singled me out from among many girls who admire him has flattered me indeed; but, should he say the words every woman wants to hear once from one man, I must answer, No.

There was a muffled cry. The letter was crumpled in fierce fingers. Then he lifted his bowed head, smoothed out the page and read on:

out the page and read on:

This, my friend, is why. He is not proving himself. He is an idler, a dreamer. With every avenue of success stretching broad and fair before him he is content to pass hours occupying a purely nominal position in his father's office. He leads the cotilion well; none better. In all matters of dilettanteism his taste is cultured and fine, and he writes the most musical yerses one may imagins. One must admire as well as love the man one marries. How can one admire the individual who saunters through life as through a charity fair? His degrees entitle him to a university professorship. His father's various interests in many places call for his personal supervision. There is so much to do before he may confidently ask a woman to give to him herself—life, body and soul—but I wish, sh, how I wish—There the letter ended.

There the letter ended. Aldrich put the letter in his pocket. He groped for his hat and gloves and coat and went out into the fresh spring afternoon. Then he remembered the unfinished poem. He returned, making it, with the glove and other little treasures, into a packet, which he put in his breast pocket. Half an hour later he stood in the luxuriously appointed room of a great city bank. A meeting of the Cirectors had just ended. His father was leaving. "What's up, Landor? You look queer."

"Will you trust me to go, father?" "You!" The elder man's haggard face lighted up, then fell. "You're not capable of the task, my boy. It's a tremendous one."

Landor smiled with pale lips, but the smile was winning. "You should have more confidence in my father's son," he protested gently. The words warmed the old man's heart like wine. His eyes blinked up

KATHERINE CLERMONT.

But the news that he was to assume control of his father's business in the Philippines had been made public in the newspapers before he saw her again. Then it was to say goodby. The hand she gave him was cold as ice, but she looked up at him with steady, unfaltering hazel eyes.

"You are really going, then? It was no newspaper canard? How we shall miss you!"

"I hope you will. May I write to you, Katherine?" He had never called her Katherine till now. "Yes, indeed! But I'm a laggard correspondent. Goodby!"

"A boy of 27 at the head!" the wise ones commented. "It seems impossi-ble that he should have shown such acumen, such ability. By the time he returned for a brief vacation, more than a year later, the business was booming. But the man who came back was not the boy who had gone away. He showed the strain of concentration, deprivation and hard, conscientious work. Katherine Clerment met him for the first time after his return at a great social function. She was in a rippling gown that swirled its black waves about her feet, with popples garlanding her beautiful shoulders The room went round when she caught sight of him. How changed, but-

"You know why I have come back!" be whispered. "To think that if it were not for a letter I chanced to read I might be mooning over verses in an office still-a letter it was not intended I should read"-

Her white lids lifted. "How do you know it was not intended for you to read?" Then she laughed softly-softly and long. He wondered why.-Buffalo Enquirer.

Unused Railroad Tickets. Some men with unused railroad tickets on their hands sell them to scalpers while others go to the railroad company that issued them and obtain their value in money. Most persons, however, do neither and accept the loss when the ticket is worth less than a dollar. Indeed many persons do not realize that the railroad companies stand ready to redeem unused tickets even of small value, so that the companies must be richer by many thousands of dollars a year through this ignorance.

Every railroad ticket bears the name of the general passenger agent and of the general manager of the road. It is a simple matter to inclose the ticket with a letter directed to the general passenger agent asking him to refund the money paid and explaining the reason why the ticket is left unused in the hands of the purchaser. It is courteous to inclose a stamped envelope in which the money may be returned.

When all these things have been done, the company generally acknowledges the receipt of the ticket holder's communication and promises to investigate the matter. The investigation consists in the proper identification of the ticket by the agent who sold it and a little bookkeeping to set the accounts right. Then the purchaser receives a check for the amount due from the railroad company along with a letter requesting acknowledgment. - New York Sun.

FACTS ABOUT HAIR.

The encyclopedias regard hair falling nary. Several years ago Miss E. J. Whitten, of Topsham, Me., was said to have hair eight feet in length. Marie Antoinette wore a pompadot and rolls thrown back past her ears

Queen Anne wore side curls. A hair is a succession of cylindrical o elliptical horny cells. Curly or kinky hair is due to sudden "breaks" in the reg-ularity of the cellular succession. Short hair was the style under the Francis I regime, but with the court of Louis XIII came long hair as a fashion,
