William Foreman & Co. Business is Business

If you can buy shoes of us cheaper than you can buy them elsewhere, is there any good reason why you shouldn't do it? Do you think the people that are asking you to pay exorbitant prices for shoes would pay you more for an article than they would your competitor? Try it and see, it is a poor rule that won't work both ways. This is our rule—"A fair profit and a cash business," this is our way of doing business and not because someone else did it.

dent, that he could not say any more on the subject but, perhaps, after the funeral he would give an address on the subject. Mr. Ross said he did not see how anyone could conceive of such a plan and action as that of the assassin.

CHRIST CHURCH.

The services in Christ Church were especially impressive yesterday. The memorial service in the morning was not very largely attended owing to the unfavorable wet weather, but all present were visibly touched by the very earnest and feeling way in which the Rev. Mr. Ross, of the death of President McKinley. In the evening there was a large attendance, and Mr. McCosh again referred briefly to the last hours of the late chief magistrate of the United States.

At the morning service Mr. McCosh based his remarks on the last clause of Numbers 23: 10; "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last be like his." He depicted the circumstances that gave birth to the last words of the dying President, and the question, "How did he live?" in a much greater importance than the question how did he die? Was he zealous for God's honor and God's house. Was he thoughtful, upright, kind and honorable? Did he give liberally of his time and money towards the spread of God's kingdom? Mr. McCosh then tenderly referred to the brave and peaceful death of President McKinley, and the beautiful evidence he furnished to the "whole world of his child-like faith in Jesus—'After,' said Mr. McCosh, 'the fatal shot had been fired by the dastardly assassin, and while the blood was trickling from the wounds he could plead for the murderer and say, 'Don't hurt him; he didn't know what he was doing.' Such a prayer, he drew nearer and nearer to Jesus, and he chanted with his dying lips that beautiful hymn, 'Nearer my God to thee, nearer to thee.' Mr. McCosh then spoke of his great mental powers and administrative ability, and placed the distinguished statesman and earnest Christian in comparison with some of the unread thoughtless young men who talk in the most flippant way of those truths about which they know nothing.

The lessons, prayers, and hymns were of an appropriate nature. Miss Maude Oliver sang with wonderful effect, "Nearer my God to Thee."

At the evening service Mr. McCosh again referred briefly to the death of the President, and drew some lessons from it. Rev. W. H. G. Colles assisted at the evening service.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN.
Rev. W. E. Knowles preached a sermon last evening especially adapted to young people. In dealing with his subject he dealt very strongly with the importance to the young people, which lies in the choosing of good associations and companions. In illustrating his subject he said:—

"President McKinley has taught the world many lessons. The reason of his ability to do this is undoubtedly due to his discretion in choosing his companions when he was a young man. As a result he was honored and beloved, not only by his own people but by other nations as well. Millions of British people now stand with bowed heads in honor of the late President, who commanded the honor and respect of all who knew him. Mr. McKinley was not a man who gloried in anything pompous. He was always retired, modest and humble and, as a result, there will be no pomp or heraldry at his funeral. He will be buried, perhaps, in the little town where he was born, but his funeral will be marked with all due respect and sorrow."

He also dwelt on the sterling qualities of Mrs. McKinley as a wife of the great President. Her influence for good which she brought to bear upon him as a result of her constant association with him, no doubt helped to strengthen him in performing his duties as President of the United States.

As a contrast he mentioned the deed of the assassin, Czolgosz, as the result of evil associations. He caught the spirit of murder from a woman. It did not come from his own breast. If he had been more careful in choosing his associations he would no doubt have turned out a better man than he did.

The music included the exquisite solo "Thy Will be Done," by Miss Ada Ross, the quartette "Crossing the Bar," by Mrs. John Cooper, Miss Ross, and Messrs. Brackin, and the anthem "Kindly Light." As an organ voluntary the Dead March in Saul was played.

PARK ST. METHODIST.

Rev. Dr. Hannon, in his sermon last evening, referred very feelingly to the life of the late President McKinley. He spoke of him as one of the great-est men that the United States has ever produced and one whose life is well worthy not only of admiration but also of imitation. In speaking of him he said:—

"There are some statesmen who if commended must be commended for their public measures, as their private character will not always bear looking into. Other statesmen are worthy of commendation principally for their goodness of character."

"McKinley, the late President of the United States, is worthy of commendation in both respects. He is to be honored both for his public measures and the goodness of his private character."

"Mr. McKinley was an American, loved by his nation, but he was also a broad, intelligent ruler, fair to all nations. His attitude towards Great Britain during the late South African war was such as to endear him to the British statesmen and people."

"Mr. McKinley was a Methodist but he was a man of high respect to people of all religious denominations."

The doctor then referred to the last words of the dying President, "It's God's way. His will be done"; also to his desiring religious service and his chanting the hymn "Hearer my God to Thee."

He also made a point of showing that although his earthly hopes were stricken down in a moment, his hope of Heaven remained sure and steadfast. In closing he spoke of McKinley's value as an example, as a man of truth and piety and even his dying words will bear good testimony as heard by all nations.

The music by the choir was also very appropriate. Among the selections were, anthem by the choir, "Crossing the Bar," Woodward; solo by Mrs. Milton Bogart, "Thy Will be Done," Marston, and "Nearer My God to Thee" by the choir.

The choir loft and the pulpit were very tastefully draped, the credit of which is due to I. L. Brock. Directly behind the pulpit were two flags, British and American, entwined together, symbolic of the peace which reigns between the two nations.

The Turn O'the Year

First hints of autumn are appearing—A stray red leaf amongst the green; a touch of asperity in the evening air, dark at seven o'clock.

It isn't summer, and it's hardly fall. Not time perhaps to put warm weather clothes away for good, but time to tone them up with a bright new item or two—For instance, the straw hat that's getting rusty can be retired in favor of a trim fedora; and a new silk tie with a touch of color in it puts a man more in touch with the time of year.

Then there's the question of heavier underwear and socks. They are both important just now in point of health.

And don't you want an umbrella before the fall fair season sets in?

Of course we should not remind you of all these wants if the wanted things were not here.
