The sight of any bird." In all faithfulness we contest among us.

Protestant parents, as you love your offspring, and as you will have to give an account hereafter of the means you employed for enlightening the minds of your loved ones, and preparing their souls for a future and a better world, we implore you to keep clear of professedly Romish institutions, and by no means to hand over the training of your children to those who cannot plant their footsteps in the path that leadeth to Heaven and to God. If you want a better education than you can at present obtain, encourage those who are competent to give it to come out from the old country, and when they come support them. At all events, until they come, encourage native and other Protestant teachers, and send not your daughters to a place where Butler's Catechism is one of the primary lesson books, and where no principles which are in accordance with that Holy Book which you venerate are permitted to be taught.

THE FIFTH JANUARY NEXT,

The intelligence from India received by last mail is of a very cheering and gratifying nature. The British troops, under the able leadership of General Wilson, have entered the stronghold of the rebel army, and taken Delhi at the point of the bayonet. In the fall of this city, the first decisive blow has been struck at the mutiny, and the re-conquest of India has virtually commenced.

On the morning of the 14th September, soon after daybreak, an assault was made on the city with four columns, one of which, consisting of Ghoorkas and the newly arrived Jummoo contingent, were repulsed—the other three columns were successful. An entrance was effected at the Cashmere gate, and the leaves of the columns were successful.
