Overland to California in '49

BY THOS. DARK.

CHAPTER VI.

To the Editor of THE SIGNAL.

Our long and tedious journey, with its incidents and dangers, was now almost at an end, and although we had possibly shared an encounter the usual amount of annoyances subject to such conditions, yet here we were all safe and sound, and enjoying a measure of good health and strength which fitted us for the arduous duties of the coming mining life. Nevada, our present resting place and future home, possessed all the features of a genuine California mining settlement. It contained no houses, but in their stead a series of canvas tents, and wooden huts, which sheltered its two hundred inhabitants, who had arrived during the past two months. The locality had acquired a wonderful name by the discovery of exceedingly

RICH DEPOSITS OF THE PRECIOUS METAL, and already quite a number of fortunate gold seekers had succeeded in making their "pile." The tale of its astonishing wealth had gone far and wide, drawing together a motley crowd from the four corners of the earth. Some of the day's fortunes have been realized by lucky Americans in this neighborhood producing incomes which far exceed that of the richest peer in England. From a miserable looking place of huts and tents, it has risen to a fine city containing thousands of inhabitants. We soon commenced looking about us, to take stock of the place and determine what was best to be done. In wandering around, we observed a lead of hay standing as if for sale. Our horses being badly off for feed we rode up to make enquiries and ascertain its price. While so engaged my horse grabbed a mouthful of the precious stuff which, however, was not taken from him by the owner. Surprised at this, I remember quite well turning to one of my comrades and remarking, "Boys, we're in a pretty tough country, for you see you are not sure of what you have even got in your mouth." On examining we concluded the load contained less than a ton, and which we were quietly informed we could have for

THE MOST SUM OF $300.

As the lucky possessor said he was in a hurry to be off, as he had a long way to travel. The price of this hay was but a fair sample of all the other necessities of life, which will convey to the mind of my readers a very good idea of the advantages of being in a land of gold. Prospective miners daily pouring in, and at once becoming consumers, and it was evident that provisions of all kinds were more apt to get dearer, than cheaper; therefore, it was decided to make a trip to Sacramento and there purchase enough of everything we required, sufficient to put us over the winter. Dick Brown of Chicago, and myself were selected for the journey—the distance being over eighty miles. Taking eight or nine horses and our Mexican saddles off we went. The trip was rather pleasant, as the travel to and from the mines was now quite heavy. Numbers of pack-horses, laden with supplies of all kinds, with men and mule-boys, were continually being passed, while their anxious owners, whip in hand, were hurrying the poor brutes along to "the distant fields so green."

In a little over two days

SACRAMENTO WAS REACHED, and as soon as possible we were comfortably located in a decent hotel where, after a lapse of over five months, we enjoyed the luxury of again living like Christians. To sit down to a well arranged table, abundantly supplied with all reasonable comforts, and finish up at night with a good clean bed, was a delightful change from lying on Mother Earth during all conditions of weather. Under such circumstances, it is any wonder that when the morning dawned, I felt a little heavily about turning out. Having succeeded in obtaining all the supplies we needed, at prices much below what we should have had to pay at the mines, we prepared for our return home, everything being packed on the horses' backs as snugly as we knew how. Not being accustomed to carry such heavy loads in this way, the poor brutes suffered terribly after only one day's travel, their backs becoming so galled and sore, that we found it quite impossible to proceed farther in this way. Camping for the night quite early, only fifteen miles having been accomplished, we decided next morning to procure a waggon if one was to be obtained. Search and inquiry failed, however, in finding one in the neighborhood; therefore we concluded I had better go back alone, and acquaint the rest how matters stood. Leaving Brown in camp to get along the best way he could, I took two of the horses and started back, having nothing to carry but me I made tolerable good progress. At night I lay down all alone, with only the clothes for cover which I wore on my back during the day.

I SUFFERED VERY MUCH FROM COLD, as those who know anything about the climate of California will be well aware of, as a good warm overcoat, and equally as warm a blanket is as necessary at night as in a more northern latitude. The second day brought me within three miles of my party, but night coming on and my horse being about used up I was compelled to pass another night in camp alone on the plains. As I lay me down to rest, I was forcibly reminded of Robinson Crusoe when he exclaimed "Oh solitude, where are the charms that ages have seen in thy face!" I was up next morning bright and early and in about an hour was in town. After a general discussion, it was thought best to try and procure a waggon and hurry down to Brown and get up our stuff. This, however, was not so easily accomplished, as no vehicle of any description whatever could be had. Word was at last sent him to hire some one to bring up the things and turn the horses out to pasture on some ranch. This was done, and in due time we received everything all right. Being now well supplied, we concluded the sooner we got to work the better, therefore selecting a site on what was known as

THE GOLD FLAT REGION.

We put up a snug little log shanty, abundance of pine timber being quite near us. To purchase a mining kit was our next move, and which we found a most expensive business as shovels and picks could not be bought for less than nine and ten dollars apiece. All being now ready we finally got to work, and commenced burrowing holes into Mother Earth in search of gold. We stuck to our claim for over five months, working hard and living hard, but after all with very poor results. Nothing but vain expectation kept us going, always imagining that tomorrow would be better than today, but alas, for us, the success of tomorrow never came. Discouraged and discouraged we at last decided to abandon the job, break up camp and each one of us go in search of something with more certainty of success. To give my readers an idea of the other side (not the bright one) of mining business, we found a practical bear in the neighborhood, squaring all up, we had only made the small sum of seventeen dollars each, for our five long and hard months' work. A baker in the neighborhood desiring to leave, we clubbed together all the money we had, and gave it to Lancaster to buy an outfit, which he succeeded in doing. Being a practical bear at the business he soon did a roaring trade, and made money fast, in a few weeks returning us every dollar we had advanced him.

SUNDAY WAS HIS BUSY DAY, as everyone quit work, to mingle with the crowd, hear the news and compare notes. It being impossible for one man to make bread and other things, and tend the shop, we all went down to help him on this day, and to give an idea of the extent of his business, I have frequently known him take several hundred and fifty dollars before night, while his profits were enormous, as many a time I sold over the little counter as much as one hundred pies a day for a dollar each. Everything else realized in proportion—pipes and tobacco, beer a dollar a bottle, and grog twenty-five cents a nip. The success of Lancaster was but a fair sample of others who had the good sense to let mining alone and follow their trade, but to the ordinary mind this did not offer sufficient excitement, while it also lacked that speculative and gambling character, which was at all times the true incentive to mining life.

HUMAN NATURE IS THE SAME THE WORLD OVER, and the motives which prompted us then, are the same as you will witness every day, only in a far more ridiculous and demonstrative manner, at either the Chicago Board of Trade or the Stock Exchange of San Francisco. In a short time our little party became scattered here and there, I myself, engaging with a man at seven dollars a day and board, to assist him at his diggings. The claim not turning out well, he gave it up, and thus I was again out of a job. However, I was soon at work again, this time at ten dollars a day and board myself. As I was allowed to make what overtime I thought proper, I used to average my eight days a week, for which I always received my eighty dollars in gold. Having a good constitution and possessed of great powers of endurance, I hardly ever knew what it was to feel tired, consequently the labor was never too hard or the day too long. Unfortunately this claim also gave out in a short time. Had it continued my boss would soon have become wealthy, while I and the rest of the gang would have shared his prosperity. I now determined to permanently abandon mining pursuits and go and assist Lancaster, but just as I was getting along nicely, I happened with an accident by letting a heavy pot of boiling water fall on my foot, which scalded me so seriously that I was compelled to take to my bed, and what with the pain and the enforced idleness, I became so restless that I am compelled to confess I got quite home-sick. Therefore as soon as I was sufficiently recovered, I made preparations for my return.
