CONSISTENT TORYISM

Your ancient and consistent high tariff man is a Tory of the oldest school. The principle of tariff, which is sacrificing one class of people to enrich another class-small, but, for the time being, influential-is founded upon the caste system which is at the base of Toryism.

Ments have taken the little end of things ever How closely high tariff is associated with the ere this district was taken into the city and with system of class distinction is shown plainly in the he exception of the inadequate systems of sewers, speech made by Mr. Cockshutt, the leader of the water mains and street lights and the street car ultra-high tariff wing of the Conservative party on which have been established there, when pressin the house of commons. The Albertan publishing need commanded an extension of these revenes below the Hansard report of his speech. It producing municipal utilities, the Heights have heen neglected. "Living is not so much higher now than it used to be if people will only live as they used to do.

"Men are not content to live now as they used to do when they walked to church on the Sabbath and thought, were doing well, even if it did not happen to be cut by a high class tailor. If we could only simplify our habits and come back to what our forefathers lived upon, we would find a vast shrinkage of the bills. That is only one item of a hundred that might be named when we consider what living is costing. My hon, friend from Maisonneuve (Mr Verville) gave figures showing that it costs a man about $900 a year to live and to bring up his family. I know of families that are living almost in affluence on not much over half that amount; they have comfortable homes of their own; they have well dressed wives and children, and they are able to give their children a first-class education in the public schools, costing ten or fifteen cents a month for each child, so that the workingman of today has practically got what the rich man of twenty years ago
