"I have been listening to her confession," replied Rosalle calmiy. "She told the police—after she signed that paper—how you went into Captain Hanska's room at night to get your family jewels, how that trick alarm on his strong-box woke him up, and how you killed him—"

But Juan Estrilla had leaped up now, as though his nerves would be denied no longer.

You are here to betray me-I know it now!" he said. Somewhere, somehow, the native cunning of him kept his voice low. To one passing, his action would have seemed but the gesture of heated argument. "You are a spy! She did not tell you that—she knows I did not kill him!" He stood shaking. "But what are you?

Have the police sent you—"
"Now, Mr. Estrilla," said Rosalle, in her most soothing tone, "I'm going to answer a lot that's in your mind before we sit right down and gets to cases. In the first place, we're alone here in the park. You're a young man and I'm an old woman.
