VICTORIAN ORDER WILL HOLD EXHIBIT IN CITY THIS WEEK

Miss Elizabeth Smellie, Superintendent For Canada, Will Be Speaker.

HOW MODEL SICKROOM

Work Will Be Demonstrated on Third Floor of Smallman's Shop.

The Victorian Order of Nurses comes before the city in a public way on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week.

Excellent lectures on the work of the Victorian Order will also be a part of this campaign to put the work of the organization before the public.

DO YOU KNOW HER?

Lecture, which will be on the general work of the order and the scholarship work, will take place at 3 o'clock in the Smallman Ingram store.

Citizens are also to be impressed with the need of old soft cotton and linen in the carrying on of this work.

Miss Harris, president of the local branch, Miss Hill, the secretary, and other members of the organization will be present at the place of the exhibit during the days of the campaign.

The national board of the Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada in Ottawa has made another great contribution to the cause of public health by establishing a number of yearly scholarships which enable the applicant selected for the scholarship to take a course in one of the leading universities.

Since the establishment of these scholarships, twelve have been utilized by the University of Western Ontario. The good done by the Victorian Order of Nurses in any community is incalculable.

Among these is Miss Lavoie, a Victorian Order scholarship nurse of the University of Western Ontario Institute of Public Health, who reports that during the last six months she has paid prenatal, post-natal, maternity, infant welfare and social service visits in her district.

Boyle Memorial Mothers' Club, Inspector Wheeler on "The School as a Nation Builder," at the school, 8 o'clock.

Campbell Becher Chapter, I. O. O. F., entertains new Canadians at "Lennore," 3 to 5 o'clock.

Rectory Street Mothers' Club, children's school program, in the school, 8 o'clock.

St. Joseph's Alumnae entertains third-year nurses at nurses' residence, 8 o'clock.

DRENDA GA SCENES CLEVERLY GIVEN

Port Bruce Summer Camp Lived Over Again on the Collegiate Stage.

"Carry me back to Orendaga" sung to the tune of "Carry me back to old Virginia" from a stage play with evergreens and centered with a great camp fire, brought the Y. W. C. A. Campers' dramatic performance to a close on Saturday night.

Perhaps the most pretentious of all the numbers was the presentation of "How Summer Came to Canada" from Prof. McMillan's "Canadian Wonder Tales." As scene followed scene, of this beautiful little legend, given under the direction of Miss Jean Walker, one wished one might have seen it played outdoors amid the beauty of the Port Bruce scenery.

Fairy-Like Garments. The rather severe but picturesque Indian costumes of part of the cast were relieved by the pretty-fairy-like garments of summer and maidens who danced into the picture in all their lovely mauves, pinks and blues and garlands of flowers.

Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Ivey are visiting in Chicago. Mrs. Orlando Taylor, Ridout street south, entertained at bridge last week.

The ladies of the Laf-a-Lot Euchre Club held a very enjoyable leap year evening at Wong's Cafe on Friday evening. The menu for the evening was a jolly one, and the evening was spent in a jolly and dancing, the first prize being won by Miss L. Hendry and Mr. W. Bone, the second by Mrs. Copeland and Mr. P. Custodio.

ST. JOHN'S UNIT. The regular meeting of St. John's Mothers' Unit is being held Thursday evening at the school in Hill street.

Farmer Brown's Boy Returns Mrs. Peter To the Old Briar Patch. By THORNTON W. BURGESS.

What had become of little Mrs. Peter Rabbit? She wasn't in the dear Old Briar Patch. The more she hunted for her the more sure Peter became that she hadn't been in the dear Old Briar Patch for two or three days.

He hunted for signs that Reddy Fox or Old Man Coyote had caught her. He knew that if they had caught her anywhere near the Old Briar Patch he would find some of her fur on the snow. But he didn't find any.

All that day he worried and waited for dark to come. Just as soon as it was dark, Peter went up to the Old Pasture. He had a feeling that he might find her there. It was in the Old Pasture that she had lived when she was young. He found her father, Old Jed Thumper but he had seen nothing of little Mrs. Peter.

It was daylight when Peter got back to the dear Old Briar Patch. Once more he hopped all through the private little paths there, hoping to find that she had returned while he was away. But she hadn't. It was so early the little Mrs. Peter to go away from the dear Old Briar Patch that Peter was sure something dreadful had happened.

Early in the afternoon Peter saw Farmer Brown's Boy come toward the dear Old Briar Patch. He was carrying something. When he got near enough Peter saw that it was that box trap in which he had been caught up in Farmer Brown's young orchard. Could it be that Farmer Brown's Boy was going to set that trap for him again? Could it be that Farmer Brown's Boy was so foolish as to think that he, Peter, would go into that trap again?

Farmer Brown's Boy came on until he reached the edge of the dear Old Briar Patch. Then he set that box trap down on the snow and opened it. Peter stared. Something moved in

R. McNeil, W. Pudney, C. Drinkwater, E. Hodgson, W. Whitton, W. W. Carrothers, Galt, formerly Miss Meta Patterson, London, as hostess last week at her home in Rich, avenue, where her mother, Mrs. L. Patterson, also received with her. Mrs. Carrothers welcomed her many callers, wearing a beaded French gown of flat crepe, with corsage of sweet peas and roses, while Miss Patterson wore a draped gown of black crepe, and corsage of violets. Yellow tulips and mauve sweet peas were effectively arranged in the reception rooms.

A charming affair of Saturday afternoon was the musicale and tea given by the Adanae Girls' Club of New St. James' Church at the home of the president, Miss Elizabeth Cross, Avondale on Saturday. Its many guests were received by Mrs. Marion Simpson presiding, gowned in navy Frenchorgette. The assistants in the team were Mrs. G. England and Miss Gwen Wood of London, while little Miss Marion Simpson made a winsome door attendant in her pretty white organdy frock with touches of blue.

Mrs. Carrothers entertained at bridge in the evening for her assistants.

A splendid program of music was provided by the Central Collegiate Orchestra during the afternoon.

SHROVE TUESDAY WILL BE MARKED BY PARTIES. Pancake Day Will See Many Festivities Throughout the City.

Shrove Tuesday, which falls tomorrow, will be the occasion of many parties throughout the city, for with the commencement of Lent on Ash Wednesday, the day following, social activities will be on the wane.

The observance of Shrove Tuesday is an old English custom, which originated centuries ago, and which is still carried on in this country.

Shrove Tuesday is always associated with merry-making and the eating of pancakes. The latter custom, it is supposed, is due to the fact that the eating of fat and eggs was prohibited during the forty days of Lent and the making of pancakes helped to use up these forbidden luxuries.

A pancake social is being held tomorrow evening at St. Joseph's School, under the auspices of the Mothers' Unit. Carols will be played, followed by a treat of pancakes.

St. Mary's Mothers' Unit is also holding a social evening in the parish hall, and the presentation of the Etimar Revue, by the Etimar Club of St. Paul's Cathedral, will be among the activities of that evening.

Next, I should give a man's business ability the careful once-over. I would not expect a young man to support me in the way in which I had been accustomed to live if my father was a prosperous man.

I wouldn't want a husband whose thoughts were so centered on his stomach that he forgot he had a heart, and who was so bilious and pessimistic that he kept the whole domestic atmosphere the color of indigo.

Next, I should pick out a man who was a hard worker, and energetic, an ambitious up-and-coming man, who was keenly interested in his business or profession. A number of reasons would enter into this selection.

First, I would want a husband of whom I could be proud, in whose career I could take an interest, and in whose success I could share, for a wife invests her all, of brains and talent and hopes, for the future in her husband.

And lastly, I should know that there is no better chaperone for a man than for him to be too busy with his occupation to have time to philander. It is the idle men and the unambitious men, who are going nowhere in particular, who have time to notice what perfectly wonderful hair their stenographers have.

Next, I should pay particular attention to a man's disposition. If he was jealous, and suspicious, and unreasonable; if he took offense easily; if he was moody and sullen; if he was high tempered and said cruel things when he was angry, I should have none of him, though he was as rich as Croesus, as handsome as Rudolph Valentino, as moral as Sir Galahad.

For it is a man's disposition with which his wife has to live every day. His virtues are mere outside ornaments for Sunday wear. So I should pick out a husband who was good-natured, who was jolly, who turned an optimistic eye on me along with the rest of the world and believed that I was trying to do the decent thing instead of the wrong thing.

You know the kind of man who is always humorous, and kindly, and philosophical; who has a pleasant word for everybody, a kiss for a child and a pat for a dog, who makes the best of every situation and who makes you feel simply by his presence that God's in his heaven and all's right with the world. That is the sort of man I would pick out for a husband.

I would pick out a generous man for a husband, a just man, a man who would not expect me to run a house on air. I would never marry a man who always roared with a water over a bill and who carried his change in a purse that he had to undo three clasps to get into.

Finally, I would pick out for a husband what the old-fashioned novels used to call "a man of sentiment." I would want a man who was understanding, who was sympathetic, on whose tenderness I could throw myself, as secure of comfort as on the piny of God.

There are plenty of men who measure up to all of these standards, and if girls would select their husbands with as much care as they do their hats there would be mighty few unhappy marriages.

"I'll Never, Never, Never Leave the Old Briar Patch Again, No Matter How I Get to," Said Mrs. Peter.

side that box. Then out hopped little Mrs. Peter, and into the dear Old Briar Patch as fast as her legs could take her! Farmer Brown's Boy laughed aloud.

"These you are," said he. "I know Peter is back here, and I guess from now on you two will keep away from your young orchard. I'll see to it that you have plenty to eat as long as this bad weather lasts, and then you will have no need of eating bark."

He was as good as his word. He left a lot of good things in the dear Old Briar Patch, and then went off whistling. Peter hopped to rub noses with little Mrs. Peter.

"I'll never, never, never leave the Old Briar Patch again, no matter if I starve to death," said Mrs. Peter. Then she told Peter her story. When he had been gone so long, she couldn't stand it any longer. She kept thinking of the tender bark in Rear Seat Is Dangerous.

A daring circus rider of Bridgeport, Conn., J. H. Van Normann, asserts that the rear seat of an automobile is more dangerous to ride in than the front seat.

When You Go Husband-Picking, Choose a Healthy, Ambitious Young Man, With a Good Disposition and a Kindly Word for Everyone—See That He Has His Head in His Work and His Heart in Your Keeping.

A young woman asks me to tell her how to choose a good husband.

Alas, daughter, there are no infallible earmarks by which you can tell beforehand whether a man will make the sort of a husband whom you keep his wife on her knees thanking God for her luck in getting him, or makes her spend the time from her wedding day to her funeral wondering what the Fool Killer was doing the day she was married that it didn't get her.

Furthermore, when a woman chooses her life partner she almost invariably uses her heart instead of her head, and this causes her to be deaf, dumb and blind to any warnings that her common sense might offer her. Nine women out of ten marry a man because he looks like a sheik, or is a glib talker and a good dancer, rather than because he possesses the desirable qualities that go to make a good yoke mate.

Next, I should give a man's business ability the careful once-over. I would not expect a young man to support me in the way in which I had been accustomed to live if my father was a prosperous man.

I wouldn't want a husband whose thoughts were so centered on his stomach that he forgot he had a heart, and who was so bilious and pessimistic that he kept the whole domestic atmosphere the color of indigo.

Aunt Martha's HOUSEWIVES' COLUMN

Just a suggestion—from one who knows the inside workings of the Dominion Store organization. When you go into one of the 300 red front Dominion Stores look first at the counters.

Do it before you leave, anyway, for there is always an extra special bargain or two there. Every Dominion Store price is a low price which saves you money, but these counter specials will save you even more.

And then too, you will get acquainted with many a fine new brand or kind of food, if you try these specials in this way. Your Dominion Store man always has an interesting story to tell about them, their quality and the special good fortune that enables him to offer them at such a low figure.

Our position as the largest retail grocery organization in Canada brings the Dominion Stores many an opportunity to present a rare bargain to our millions of customers. Food makers and sellers from everywhere come to us with special prices, for they know the Dominion Stores buy in such vast quantities that they can afford to sell to them at a lower profit.

Then we pass their low prices along to you at a very low profit for ourselves—and you get the double benefit. Just look for those specials next time you are in a Dominion Store.

THE WOMAN WHOSE CHILDREN GREW AWAY

I know Helen is slipping away from me. She disapproves of my furniture and the wallpaper grieves her soul.

I am busy with the housework all day long and in the evening I am tired.

She plays the old-time songs on the gramophone for me, but she likes the selections with French words written by a Russian composer and sung by an Italian tenor.

I see my mistake now and I am resolved that part of the housework shall go.

The laundry work is one of the most laborious tasks, and I am going to call 655 today and try three different priced family laundry plans used I find one that just suits me.
