SCIENCE.

About the Comet.

The latest computations prove that Coggia's comet, now nightly observable with the naked eye, is the most extraordinary body of the kind that has ever visited the solar system, and that probably by the 21th of July the earth will be passing through its tail. Already the tail is about three millions of miles long, but, as like Donati's comet, the tail of this one is curved (though from the position of the earth we cannot perceive the curvature), the real is much greater than the apparent length. Mr. Henry M. Parkhurst, who has been making calculations in regard both to the orbit of the comet and the gradual elongation of the tail, estimates that the perihelion distance of the comet from the sun lies just within the orbit of Venus, and that the tail increases one-tenth each day. He further makes a number of predictions in regard to this wonderful visitor, which are of so interesting a character that we quote them in full :—

On Tuesday, July 2, at half-past nine o'clock, the comet will be easily seen by the naked eye in the northwestern sky (no other description will be needed) with a tail about five degrees in length. On succeeding evenings the nucleus will move towards the south, while the tail will increase in length, so as
