THE CANADIANS ON THE KENTISH DOWNS

Sturdy Sons of Dominion Win Praise in England

MORE ANGLO-SAXON THAN ARE THE ENGLISH

No Regiments in The British Army March Better and That is Saying a Great Deal—Engagement Rings For Many of The Girls

The London Daily Express, in a recent issue said—

"If you cross the South Downs in Kent at the present time, and ask the first soldier you meet if you are in the neighborhood of the Canadian camps, you will receive the reply, 'Yes—sure,' in the accent which seems to English ears to have had direct from 'Chicago' but it is pure Canadian.

There are many thousands of Canadians camped on the Kentish Downs. A hundred years ago the Kentish yeomen trained there to meet Napoleon's threatened invasion. Eight hundred years ago along the same line of hills, but a little farther west the Saxons gathered to meet the Norman invaders, and two thousand years ago the Britons trained along these hillsides to watch the ships of the incoming Romans. Today Canada's second army has pitched its huts on the Downs, and if you ask the Canadian soldier whether he likes the spot he replies emphatically, 'Yes—sure.' If he did not, he would be hard to please.

All the Same

Canada has stamped her hall mark on every one of these thousands of her sons—the Sam Hughes look. Whether from the east or the west of the far west or the north—and they come from every corner of Canada—the Sam Hughes look is over them all. You see it in the eyes, whose glance is as straight as that of a machine gun, and in the mouth, which is as firm as a steel plate, and in the poise of the head, which is as steady as the Rocky Mountains. There is an air of assurance and confidence in the walk, as if each man felt quite sure that the earth was made for Canadians; and a super-American aspect of independence, which is all part of the Sam Hughes look.

There are not merely battalions, but brigades of these tall, broad-shouldered, deep chested Canadians on the Kentish Downs. Their faces are tanned and they are as fit as men can be. No one in England has heard much about them—the Press Bureau properly caused us to ignore their arrival—but for three months they have been at home on the Kentish Downs, and in two of three of the little straggling towns along the sea their maple leaf is more familiar than the badge of the Kentish battalions. All the girls have several Canadian admirers each—sure. But for all the intense Canadianism of these sons of the Maple Leaf, there is no doubting the breed from which they have sprung. They look, indeed, more Anglo-Saxon than the English, for they have marked the Anglo-Saxon invaders, but which centuries of settlement have tamed in the English. They are more like our forefathers than we are ourselves.

Marching As To War

Take your stand on some edge of the Downs a few miles from the camps and watch a brigade of the Canadians come over the hillside. They are marching as to war, battalion after battalion, each with its mule-train of ammunition, its supply wagons, its ambulances and a line of cooking stoves on wheels, bubbling as they go, with the smoke trailing from their chimneys. After them come the guns and the long line winds down the steep lane to the sea level and crawls away across the miles of marshland, towards the brouse for the night. It is a ready for war brigade, made and hall-marked in Canada. But, as you stand near the little old church, where the dead of the parish have been buried during a thousand years and as you watch these roving fighters swing by, the breasts of many of them bare to the sun and the breeze, and their grey-blue eyes bright with the joy of living, you begin to forget that they are all from Ontario, and that they are men who call themselves by that new name of Canadians. You see them then the old Anglo-Saxon fighters who conquered Britain and made England.

They bivouac on the chilly marshes for the night, sleeping on their waterproof sheets, and at half past five in the morning are astride again, for they are to fight the battle of Hastings anew, as invaders, with another brigade as the defending enemy. The defenders—men from Quebec, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and New Brunswick (a battalion of French-Canadians among them)—have bivouaced on the hillside and at daybreak line the trenches prepared for the defence.

Light on England

The fight occupies most of the day, and ends when the invaders, bridging a canal, turn the defenders' flank and gain the country at their rear. Like all true fighters when the fighting does not immediately concern them, some of the defenders snore peacefully in the shade at noonday under the trees, awaiting the signal for action. Here and there one of them goes over the countryside with eyes for the beauty of the view.

"Sure, I never thought England was like this," says a New Brunswicker, "I always imagined England was all built up; I didn't think there'd be fields and sheep and trees. I guess I'd like to have a good look round England when that's the case." The real excitement of the day is that of the scouts, who crawl round corners, look over the countryside with eyes for the beauty of the view. "I always imagined England was all built up; I didn't think there'd be fields and sheep and trees. I guess I'd like to have a good look round England when that's the case."

body cut a piece from my foot palm. He felt his legs and then his feet to solve the mystery. At last he discovered the mistake to be in his shoes, for he had put on one shoe with a thick sole and one with a thin sole. "These shoes are odd ones, and not a pair," said he.

So he called loudly for his servant and ordered him quickly to change his boots. The servant went into the room to bring the master's boots, but after a little time came back with a much puzzled expression on his face.

The master sternly demanded the boots for which he had sent him, and received for his answer: "Dear master it is very strange, but there is no use for me to change your boots, for when I examined the pair of boots in the room I found that they are just like the pair you have on, for one has a thick sole, the other a thin sole—St. Nicholas Magazine.

EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL

To the Editor of the Times-Star: Sir,—The following is from the Ottawa Citizen—

"The sincere temperance advocate has the greatest consideration for people who have used alcoholic liquors more or less all their lives not knowing that the practice was harmful either to themselves or to the children that might be born to them. But the truth in respect to alcoholism must be declared again and again that people may free themselves from this great menace to the individual and the nation.

What is the truth, and where may it be found? Great government commissions in many countries have spoken; science has spoken with no uncertain sound; church conventions of all denominations have spoken and the great emperors of the world have spoken; all agree that alcohol in any form if used frequently, is poisonous to the drinker and his offspring. Read and weigh the following sentences from the report of the French commission and determine for yourself whether Clifton attaches too much importance to this matter:

"Sins of alcoholic parents are visited on the children. If they survive infancy they are threatened with idiocy or epilepsy and many are carried away with tuberculosis. For the health of the individual, for the existence of the family, for the future of the nation alcohol is one of the most terrible scourges."

These are serious words from a source that should command respect. H. ARNOTT, M. B., M. C. P. S.

Captain Olsson Drowned

Captain Gustav Olsson, late master of the Swedish bark Belleville, was drowned at New Ferry Station on the night of May 26. He was returning from a Norwegian ship when he fell out of his row-boat and was carried under a float. He was well known about the water front in this city. He is survived by his wife and several children at Mollie, Sweden.

An excellent salad dressing can be made from the following:—Required—three well beaten eggs, a small quantity of pepper, a teaspoonful each of salt and mustard, three tablespoonfuls of milk, a breakfast cupful of vinegar, and half pound butter. Those ingredients should be placed in a saucepan and stirred until the mixture has become quite thick. This should be bottled and used when required.
