MORE FOR NEW YORK

FROM the great wide open spaces around Shelby, Montana, to the bull ring of Mexico City is quite a leap but time and distance are of little concern to the non-fighting heavyweight champion of the world these days. In fact, some of the hard-boiled guys would say that Dempsey is right at home where the bulls perform. "All we have listened to from that bird for several years now is what he is going to do but the doing takes a long time," they say. Perhaps they are a little too harsh with the would-be movie star in view of the some-what technical explanation given regarding that operation on Demp-sey's beak. It is said that the re-construction involved the placement hypodermically of a quantity of hot liquid paraffin and that it requires some time before the wax is changed into connective tissue. Any irritation might set things back as they were, it is said. The possibility that his proboscis might assume its natural state doubt-less has preyed on the great champion's mind to such an extent that he fears to risk it against the crude fists of an opponent. They might let him use one of those guards the football players find handy but the next thing we know Harry Wills would want shin pads and Benny Leonard's opponents would want ear pads to prevent him from talking them out of a bout. History will record that Dempsey's noble beak was of lasting effect on fistiana. He should have filled it up with iron and then the whacks would not be noticed.

FRANK GODDARD, whom ex-C. E. F. men will remember flourished in England with Joe Beckett during the war, is at it again. He is billed to meet Phil Scott in November.

ALTHOUGH the world series seems a time-honored institution, venerable with age, it is a fact that only 69 home runs have been made in the big clashes, the big majority of them coming in the last few years with the lively ball. The Pirates and Senators between them boosted the merry total to the mark noted above by crashing out 12 homers in the late lamented series, Messrs. Goslin and Harris contributing three each to the festivities or half the total with Judge, Peckinpaugh, Moore, Cuyler, Traynor, Wright trailing along with one each. The "Goose", incidentally, set up a new record by getting his sixth homer, thus beating Babe Ruth's mark. The series homers this year constitute as record for any one clash, being two better than the hectic affray in 1923 between the Yankees and Giants. * * * * *

WRITING in a New York paper recently, a prominent sport scribe has the following: "It remained for the late world series to determine the right of "Pie" Traynor of the Pirates to lay claim to the
