I cannot understand how it is 'hat we never hear anything about the wrongs of men! Of writers and spea'ers who sing variations on the threadbare theme of woman's rights and woman's wrongs there seems to be no lack, and the moment one champion falls in the fray two or three arise to take her place, so there is never a breach in the results. But so fer, man has a limited extent, and her husband must multimited extent, and her husband must multimited extent, and her husband must must now her hills she can get a diverse. look as if he would have to go on groaning unnoticed, for an indefinite number of years

In vain I have waited and hoped, feelsure that some of my downtrodden brothers would pluck up enough spirit to talk back some day, and stand up for his sex. But with a patience that is almost divine man has persisted in his determination to suffer in silence, and my sense of justice has forced me into the field in his detence at last, much as I dislike netoriety, and greatly as I shrink from the storm of abuse which I know too well will be directed at my devoted head by the lovely enemy whose stronghold I am about to assail.

"The down-trodden sex" they love to call themselves, but is seems to me that if the truth were known the shoe is very much on the other foot, and the iron heel of despotism is not hob-nailed now-a-days, but shaped on the model known as French, which tapers very much to the middle of the foot, and it very frequently supports a foot which is rather too large for the shoe which encloses it. How we married men laugh, or else jeer, when we read about the wrongs of woman, but somehow we don't say very much about the subject to each other, we prefer to keep up the pleasant faction that we are lords of creation and do just as we please. But up the pleasant fiction that we are lords of creation and do just as we please. But each one knows in his heart that he really ongs to the abject sex, and somewhere allegiance and who lords it over him to such an extent that he dare not say his soul is his own. He probably enjoys the tyr-rany immensely, especially if he is a very manly man, but all the same he has his neck to the yoke with all possible meekness, and goes just where his conqueror leads him.

think not, and even if he does not acknowledge it, the sway is there all the same.

Did any of those writers who bewail the wrongs of woman, ever stand by and watch a man mending a hen-coop or patching up the garden tence, under the supervision of his wite? I doubt it very much, because if they did the intormation they would acquire on the subject of men's supremacy, that would surprise them. No journeyman ever bullied an apprentice as that woman bullies her busband, and the amount of advice and instruction she gives him is enough to make his head turn. If he happens to be a carpenter she can tell him more about his own trade in ten minutes than he has acquired by a practical experience of ten years, and the less she knows about the subject in hand the more information she gives him. She can't even let him sharpen a pencil without telling just how to do it, and adding that if he is not careful he will cut himsell.

In fact woman loves to rule, and she is never so happy se when she has some big good-natured man to tyrranize over, the bigger the man the better. I suppose there is not the same pleasure in bullying.

The 66th consented and migrated across the stand, but were much amazed when Bandmaster of the 66th sine, "Shand in struction of being the 66th onto men, 'stand the size of white interion of being the 66th onto men, 'stand the wisted. When the King's band finished, the 66th same, 'Stand the work was issued by his directions. Even the bandmaster Carlton was naturally at a loss. He appealed to the rink for their performance. What riled the 66th band more than the work was about it, and the more information she gives him. She can't even let him sharpen a pencil without telling just how to do it, and adding that if he is not careful he will cut himsell.

In fact woman loves to rule, and as he is never so happy se when she has some big good-natured man to tyrranize over, the bigger the man the better. I suppose there is not the same pleasure in bullying.

The fact woman loves to rule, and as he is never so h good-natured man to tyrranize over, the bigger the man the better. I suppose there is not the same pleasure in bullying one of your own size, as there is in making something very much bigger "mind" when you speak. The mere fact of the way women take care of men, tidy up their dens till the unfortunate owners cannot find anything, and destroy all their most valuable possessions as useless litter; the way they force him to change his suit, and make him smarten up against his will; insist on his wearing his overcoat and thick flannels, when he prefers taking cold in his own way, and take him out calling when he wants te stay at home: all these trifles only serve to prove beyond the possibility of a doubt that woman is really the oppressor and man the humble victim.

And to pass from individual cases to the world at large, what is man's portion in society and even in his own house? Why, he cannot so much as invite his own friends to dinner without his wife's consent, for everyone knows that a man's invitation invite whoever she pleases without conng him. From the moment he is or which occasion he is regarded as a sort of blot on the proceedings, he is a little more than a necessary adjunct in his own house, useful but of not of much account, something to be taken care of and kept in order, but not consulted much. And then to pass on from the social, to the legal as-arise to take her place, so there is never a breach in the ranks. But so far, man has been without a defender; not one of his sex seems to have enough courage to rise up and proclaim to the world the oppression under which man has groaned in silence for so many years, and it begins to look as if he world have no groaning. and still force him to the state of last, but not least, she can poison her husland comfortably when she gets tired of band comfortably certain that even him, and feel comfortable certain that even him and feel comfortable certain that even him and feel comfortable certain that even hi

A ROW OVER BANDSTANDS.

How Two Leading Halifax Regiments Fell

HALIFAX, Feb. 28.—There was son friction last week between the bands of the King's Regiment (imperial troops) and the band of the 66th P. L. F., the militia regiment of this city. Happily what threatened to be a serious storm blew over without any memorable evil consequences.
The little difficulty occurred at the exleads him.

I wonder if there is a man in the world (of course I am not speaking of the brutes one reads about, chiefly in the English papers, who gouge out their sweethearts' eyes, and make a common practice of dancing on their wives' heads with hobnailed boots) I mean the men who are decent citizens, and worthy to be called men—I wonder if there is such a one in the world who is not under petticoat government of some kind, who does not acknowledge it, the sway is there all the same.

Did one of these writers who have it the first number, when they in turn would retire, both bands to occupy the same stand alternately. So the 66th wonsented and migrated across hibition rink. It was a carnival night, and

There are quite a number of charities in the city that owe their existance to women and in which women are actively interested
The Women's Christian Temperance Union, which is perhaps the most active of the women's societies now, established a Little Girls' home. It may also be remarked here parenthetically that the union accomplish much by means of their coffee rooms, kitchen garden, relief fund and jail and prison work. At the general hospital there is a nurse's home in connection that was established by Lady Tilley. Mrs. McNichol established an infants' home which is doing good work. The Home for Aged Females is another of these institu-tions. Another which is now closed, the Sailors' Home, was founded by Miss Nicholson.

Women have also had something to say about the administrative affairs in the past. They have obtained the right to vote in municipal elections and they are eligible to serve on the school board. Mrs. Atkinson, of Moncton, has the grand dis-

Some extraordinary captures of Arctic and other rare birds have been made in the Cambridgeahire fens. A specimen of the Arctic bird, Brunnich's guillemot, was found near Wisbech St. Mary's, not far from the frozen waters of the River Nene. It is stated that probably this is the first specimen of this bird ever captured in Great Britain, and has, no doubt, been driven southward by the severity of the weather. No fewer than four specimens of the little auk have also been captured in the same district.
