

humanity, must eventually command the sympathy and financial support of all charitably inclined people.

Again, we have good reason to thank our many liberal contributors and supporters. The Loyal Orange Association has not been unmindful of the little ones under our charge, they have liberally rendered us their assistance. For their open hands and loyal hearts we are truly grateful. The Protestant public has not forgotten us and many expressions of sympathy have been demonstrated in a practical manner during the year by the gift received at their hands. The members of our Order are ever on the alert to work and give, and never before have our earnest members been more faithful than during the year just closed. All should share in the work and not allow the faithful ones ever to carry this banner of love along. It is an honor, a glory, and a duty, in which we all should share, for our is the greatest blessing in being another's burden bearer.

Over the Jordan

Many brave men have passed since we last assembled, but not one braver or greater than the man who for years heralded the work of True Blueism and stamped it with his approval. His admiration and love for the True Blue Home flowed through his heart from his own pen, and his well-wishes were carried to every corner of the British Empire, and beyond its wide sphere, through that Messenger which for many years he fearlessly yet lovingly edited in the interest of our religion and our cause. No greater friend than he have we been called upon to sustain the loss of. We can truly join with the tens of thousands of voices who sing the praises of the late lamented Brother E. F. Clarke. Even at this late hour we cannot allow our first opportunity as an assembled body to pass without expressing our grief over his loss, and our sympathy for those whom he left behind.

The story of other lives that have been lived among us will be read by another officer, all reminding us that the roll up yonder is being called and warning us to be prepared.

Praise for The Sentinel

The Sentinel still continues a fearless Protestant advocate. Its pages teem with Protestant truth. It continues to warn men of a pending danger. We cannot afford not to use the pages of the Orange Sentinel more freely. There is a noticeable lack of True Blue news in its columns. It pays the private lodge to advertise its work. It inspires others to read of the success attending the efforts of their brethren elsewhere. It keeps the society in public view. Every lodge should have its Sentinel scribe, and every member should be a reader of the scribe's contributions to True Blue literature. It is the same old Sentinel clothed in more profusion with interesting Protestant thoughts. It has no peer as a work of literature in Canada. It expresses the ideal which will make Canada a great nation, and represents the people who will be the ruling element in Canadian life. In whose hand the true success of our country now and always will depend.
