Y, OCT. 17, 1903.

lur Subscribers,

that owing to absence ty the enclosed has been obliged for your consicontinuing the paper as a distinct loss to my without it. Yours truly, please find postal order cription for 1904. The ual is always welcome, nore and more interestlarly the advices to the o badly needed, and the articles rather on the h are so important and hout your generous reve would be left perfectly valuable information on Leo XIII. and the elecs X. has enabled me to n, especially with ole who are readers of t literature of the day forget to mention the Observer," whose artii not do without, they and praiseworthy. wishes for the success of litness." I am.

A."

hfully yours, MRS. K. D. M.

ne dollar to renew my to your valuable paper contains pure and ading matter for Cathshould find a place in ic family. I send anand the name of a new Vishing your paper every

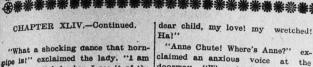

I am, Sincerely yours, 7 F. L. D.

SEVEN POPES

ecular paper tells of an Omaha, who has lived opes. The name of this gyman is Father Wiln Irishman by birth. He er Pope Pius VII. When ears old, Pope Leo XII. throne. After a reign this Pontiff died, and d by Pope Pius VIII. y lasted two years. The s Gregory XVI., who rone until 1844. Then . In 1878 Pope Leo ed Pius IX., and now X.-in the year 1903. concerning the life of we find the following. ame to America, and at Omaha, and took first Catholic Church was a poor little woodabout forty feet long wide, and stood on te of the Burlington in Eighth street. The on of Omaha was then ils, and the congregassarily small and far Father Kelly labored ringly and with a coniasm and energy to ittle congregation. So his labors that he h sent into the then ness to build up new he use of the Chrishearts!

"Take her away, good Kyrle."

this night is horrid and fearful?

Her hands were employed, while to fix a stigma on our name and unhappy bride?

will not stir-"

mother.

always reminded when I see it of the mpers of a piano." "Precisely, indeed," said Hardress, with a smile like death, "very ridiculous indeed. Tell me how you know of this?" he said apart to the filled with anxious inquiry.

"Speak low and quickly." From a little hunchback in bridebride! Oh, horrid, fearful night! well at magistrate Warner's," turned the lad. "He bid me - but Come-come!" "I will not stir!" exclaimed the the lady is talking to you."

"I beg your pardon," said Hardturning quickly round. "It was not I," said the fair dansome danger threatens Hardress -"it was Mrs. Cregan called." Tell me, if there is-"

SATURDAY, OCT. 17, 1903.

Hardress looked at his mother, and her holding towards him a saw mall basket of confectionery and oranges, while she glanced towards the ladies. Hardress rose to perform this piece of gallantry with a estion of gloomy resignation, and with a feeling of bitterness towards his unhappy parent, as if she ought hov.

to have known that she was knotting the cord upon his life. When it was done, he hurried to his seat, but the servants were all gone and the door was closed. He stole from the apartment to the hall, once more resumed his hat, and ascending the small flight of steps leading to the chamber so often mentioned, he was once more upon the point of freedom. But the grasp of an avenging Providence was laid upon his life. In the middle of this chamber he en-

"Hardress," said she, "are you leaving us for the night?" "I am," he murmured in a faint voice, and passed on.

'Stay, Hardress!'' said Anne, laying her hand upon his arm. "I have something to say, which you should know immediately." This last interruption completed the confusion of the bridegroom. A sudden faintness fell on his whole It passed away, and she rose to her usual height and her customary frame, his brain grew dizzy, his stateliness of eye and gesture. senses swam, and he reeled, like one intoxicated, into a vacant chair.

'Well, Anne," said he, " anything everything-my life itself, if you think it worth your while to require "I owe it to my own peace, and even to yours, Hardress," said Anne,

"to tell you that I have discovered all.' "Discovered all!" echoed Hardress, springing to his feet. 'Yes-all. A generous friend-generous to you and me alike- has given the whole history of your cause suffering, and has left me nothing to regret, but that Hardress should not have thought it worth his while to make Anne a partner in his confidence. But that I have forgotter likewise, and have only now to say that I regret my own conduct much as I once was grieved for yours. I must have added to the pain which-Hark!" "What do you hear?" cried Hardhearts you might crush together at ress, crouching fearfully a blow.

"There is a tumult in the drawingtoom. Good Heaven, defend our hearts! What is that noise?" The door of the room was th

"Here, here!" said Mrs. Cregan. Kyrle Daly rushed into the room, purpose of resistance. his face paler than ever, and his eye

"Come this way, Anne!" he said, taking her hand, while his own were nere? What's the matter?" rembling with anxiety. "Unhappy conscious of his presence. bride with vehemence. "What means those words and actions? There is duct," he said, turning an unsteady eye upon the captain. "Soldiers, offiers, eh, Connoily?" "He shall not take me hence. Why should he? Why does he call me an Why does he say withdraw your soldiers."

duct," echoed Connolly.

"They are coming!-force her hence, by the taunt of Mrs. Cregan, returngood Kyrle," muttered the expectant ed this demand by a stern look. "Stand by me, Connolly. Your Struggling in his arms, and oposing prayers, threats, and entreathe drew his own. The others imitated his example.

Captain Gibson without condescending to unsheathe his own weapon, turned to his men, and, beckoning instant; a few slight scratches being all that was sustained by the soldiers in the drunken scuffle that ensued. The gentlemen were placed, with their hands tied, on chairs at danger, and her frame made the other side of the room, and the rigid with the intensity of feeling. bundle of rapiers were laid upon the window-seat.

and gentle

this attitude, in arranging her hair, "Very well, sir-very well," said and removing as far as possible Mr. Cregan; "I shall remember this, every appearance of disorder from and so shall my friends. I am a her dress. At length, the clatter of gentleman, sir, and shall look for the muskets and the tramp of many feet satisfaction of a gentleman." was heard in the little hall. A momentary convulsion shook her frame Connolly, swinging his person round

'And me," said a third.

"And me," echoed a fourth.

At the same moment the door "I little expected to meet with opened, and Mr. Warner accompanied such a return as this for our hospiby Captain Gibson and the military tality," continued Mr. Cregan. "For shame! for shame, Cregan," said the unhappy mother; "do not degrade ydurself and your friends by such remonstrances. The hand of an enemy is raised against us, and let not the unworthy being think that he can sink us as low in mind ing to recomment that she should retire when she cut short the speech.

Captain Gibson, who took no no tice of the gentlemen, again seemed hurt to the quick, perhaps not wisely, by this allusion from the lady. "Mrs. Cregan," he said, "it is one of the most painful duties of a gentleman in my situation, that he must sometimes be subjected to such insinuations as those; and it is only the peculiar circumstances in which you are placed that would prevent my forming a very harsh judgment of

"Sir," said Mrs. Cregan, lowering

You have done the worst of evil in your power; you have disbitter irony, "your consideration mayed our guests, scattered terror amid our festival, and .made the remembrance of this night, which bear witness to it. It must have surely been with much violence to that fine gentlemanly spirit that you chose a moment like this for your investigation. But I see you are impatient, sir, and I will desist, for you are a soldier, and I am but a female, and it is easy to see who ner, hurrying into the room "Is he?" shrieked the distracted and almost delirious mother. "Dark blood-hound, have you found him?

THE TRUE WITNESS AND CATHOLIC CHRONICLE.

May the tongue that tells me so be withered from the roots, and the eye that first detected him be darkened in its socket!" "Peace, shocking woman," said the magistrate; "your curses only aid to the offence that Heaven has already suffered." "What!" cried the unhappy parent, "shall it be for nothing, then, that you have stung a mother's heart, and set the mother's brain on fire? I tell you, no! My tongue may hold its peace, but there is not a vein in all my frame but curses you! My child! my child! sh screamed aloud, on seeing Hardress at the door. She rushed, as if with the intent of flinging herself upon his neck, but checking the impulse as she came near, she clasped her hands, and, sinking at his feet, exclaimed, "My child, forgive me!"

"Forgive you, mother!" replied her son, in a wretched voice; "I have destroyed you all!"

"The crime was mine," exclaimed the miserable parent; "I was the author of your first temptation, the stumbling-block between you and repentance. You will think bitterly of me, Hardress, when you are alone." "Never!" said Hardress, raising her in his arms. "Still honored, always well-meaning and affectionate. will never think of you but as a mother. My eyes are open now. For the first time in many weary months, the first thought of peace is in my heart; and but for you, and whom I have made wretched those with you, I would call that thought thought of joy. Grieve no more, mother, for my sake. Grieve not, because it is vain. The bolt has sped, the victim has been struck, and Earth has not a remedy. A victim was due to Justice, and she shall no longer be defrauded. I had rather reckon with her here than in a future world."

"I cannot part with you," murmured his mother, while her head rested on his shoulder; "do not put away my hands awhile. It is tearing my very heart up!"

"Dear mother, let me go," said Hardress, gently disengaging himself: "we shall meet again, I hope. In the meantime, hear my farewell request, as you have heard all that I have ever made; waste not your lays in idle retrospection, but pray for me with fervor, be kind to those whom I have loved, and remember that my death, at least, was happier than my life."

"I threatened you with poverty," muttered Mrs. Cregan, while he her memory glanced wildly through the past.

"Dear mother!-" "I hade you leave my house or do my pleasure-'

"Why will you vex my soul at such moment? "I have tied the cord upon your throat. I slighted your scruples You own dread words come back upon me now. Those words which I heard with so little emotion as Dinis, and in this hall before, now ring like the peal of dead-bells in my I have been your feliest foe. You drank in pride with my milk, and passion under my indulgence. I have destroyed you for this worid, and-

"My dear, dear mother!" cried Hardress, clasping her to his breast, and bursting into tears of shame and repentance, "forget, I implore you, those impious and reproachful words; they were the ravings of my madness, and should not be regarded. Hear me now, in the full and calm possession of my judgment, and fold. It is my mother, you will say, who has bound these cords upon my limbs. The people will stars en you and you will hang yow beat, and say that I was the author of your ne. And in the moment of your death-

"I will pray for you," said Hardress, pressing her to him and kissing her forehead, "as you will do for me." While he spoke he felt the arms that encircled his neck grow and the face that looked up to his was overspread with a damp and leaden paleness. "Farewell, dear mother!-for the present," he continued, "and rememper-Oh, she is growing cold, and weak; remove her-remove her quickly, gentlemen!"

She was borne out, in a haif fainting condition, and Hardress suirendering himself to the hands of the soldiers, prepared to depart. Turning round once more before he left the room, he said aloud:-

"Hear me, and testify against me if it shall please you. Lest my rel turning feebleness, or the base love of life, should tempt me once again to shun my destiny, I am willing nere to multiply my witnesses. I am guilty of the crime with which you charge me-guilty not in act, nor guilty even in word, nor positive implied assent-but guilty, beyond even the wish of pardon. I am glad this hideous dream at length is ended; glad that I have been forced to render up her right to Justice, even against my will, for I was sick of my anxieties."

He ceased, and the party proceeded down the narrow staircase, leading to the hall-door, Hardress being placed in the centre. In a few minutes the lighted chambers of the Castle, its affrighted revellers, its silenced musicians, the delirious mothe drunken father and ther, his band of brawlers, the bewildered bride, and all the scattered pomp of the espousal, were lost to the eye of the unhappy Hardress.

Some apprehension was entertained lest any injudicious person amongst the peasantry should occasion the useless loss of lives by attempting a rescue before the party left the neighborhood; but no symptoms of such an intention was manifested by the people. The whole transactio been conducted with so much had rapidity, that the circumstance the bridegroom's capture was not generally known, even in the Castle, for some time after his departure.

CHAPTER XLV.

HOW
THE
STORY
ENDED.

It only remains for us to inform the reader, in general terms, of the subsequent fortunes of the various actors in this domestic drama. Such is the fate of the historian, regarded only as the chronicler of events or feelings in which he has no share ; his claim to attention rests only up on those. While they continue awaken interest, he may toy and dally as he pleases; he may deck his style with flowers, induige his fancy in description, and even please his vanity with metaphysical speculation; but when the real matter of the tale is out, farewell his hobbies! Stern and brief must henceforth be to the ignominy of such a fate. An occurrence which took place on the day of his departure completed the ruin which ill-health had long been making in his consitution.

II

The convict-ship which was to bear him from his home had cleared out of port, and lay at anchor in that part of the river, which, from its basin-like appearance, has received the appropriate denomination of the Pool. In the gray of a summer morning the prisoners, Hardress amongst the number, left the goal in King's Island, where they had been confined, for the purpose of occupying their places on board. Arrived at the river side, the party halted with their guard, while a small boat was let down from the vessel's stern, and manned for the shore. It touched the strand, and received its lading of exiles. It could not hold the entire party, and Hardress, who felt a sudden and to him, unaccountable reluctance to leave his native soil while it was possible for him yet to feel its turf beneath his feet, petitioned to be left until the return of the pinnace

He looked to the misty hills of Cratloe, to the yet silent, and inactive city, and over the face of the gently agitated waters. The fresh. cool, light of the morning only partially revealed the scene; but the veil that rested on the face of nature became more attenuated every instant, and the aerial perspective acquired by rapid yet imperceptible degrees, a greater scope and clearness. Groups of bathers appeared at various distances on both sides of the river, some plunging in headlong from the lofty quays, some playing various antics in the water and some floating quietly on the surface of the tide in the centre of the stream, while others, half-dressed and shivering at the brink of the sloping strands, put in a hand or foot to ascertain the temperature of the refreshing element, before venturing to fling off their remaining habiliments, and share in the salu tary recreation. In other respects the scene was nearly the same in appearance as it has been in the third chapter of this Nature, always the same volume. calm and provident benefactress, had preserved her mighty heart unchanged throughout the interval, and the same joyous serenity was still visible upon her countenance. The passions of men may convulse the frame of society; the duration of human prosperity may be uncertain as that of human woe; and centuries of ignorance of poverty, and of civil strife may suddenly succeed to years of science, and thrift and peace; but still the mighty mother holds her course unchanged. Spring succeeds winter, and summer spring, and all the harmonies of her system move on through countless ages with the same unvarying serenity of purpose. The scene of his happy childhood evinced no sympathy with the condition of the altered Hardress.

He turned with an aching heart from the contemplation of the landscape, and his eyes encountered a spectacle more accordant to his present feelings. The row of house which lines the quay on which the party halted, consisted for the most part of coffin-makers' shops, a gloomy trade, although, to judge by the reckless faces of the workmen, it would appear that "custom made it with them a property of easiness."

Only one of those dismal houses of traffi was open at this early hour, and the light which burned in the interior showed that the proprietor was called to the exercise craft at this unseasonable time by some sudden and pressing call. The profession of the man was not indicated, as in more wealthy and populous cities, by a sculptured lid. gilded and gaudy hatchments suspended at a window-pane. A pile of the unfinished shells, formed for all ages from childhood to maturity, were thrust out at the open window, to attract the eye of the relatives of the newly dead. The artificer himself appeared in the interior of his workshop, in his working-dress, and plane in hand, was employed in giving the last touch to an oaken coffin, placed lengthways on his bench Its size denoted that the intended occupant had died in the full maturity of manhood. While Hardress watched him plying his melancholy trade in sile a horseman rode up to the door, and dismounted with some awkward and difficulty. He was a small, rel haired man, and Hardress thought that the face and manner were not altogether new to his observation. Another horseman followed, and lighted with more ease and ness. He was tall and well for and Hardress shrank aside from h and Hardress shrank aside from his gaze, for in this person he recognized one of the persons who appeared a gainst him at his trial. Leaning a gainst one of the short posts used for the purpose of holding the cables of the shipping, and once more turn-

THE A TALE OF GARRYOWEN. COLLEGIANS. -----BY Gerald Griffin. ****

****** Cregan, Mr. Connolly, and two three other gentlemen, came reeling Chute! Where's Anne?" exinto the apartment, excessively inclaimed an anxious voice at the doorway. "Where is the bride?" toxicated, and retaining consciousness enough to feel a sense of injury not wholly understood, and a vague "Dora," said Mr. Cregan, staggering towards her, and endeavoring to look sober, "what are you doing

Mrs. Cregan, her whole soul absorbed by the proceedings in the inner room, did not even appear to be

"Very-very extraordinary con-

"Very-very extraordinary con-

"Do they take the house for a barack?" continued Cregan. "Captain,

Captain Gibson, already annoyed swords, gentlemen!" cried Cregan as with his finger, said:-"Disarm those drunken

His orders were obeyed upon the

"Expect the same from me," said upon the chair.

party, appeared upon the little stair The first mentioned seemed surprised, and somewhat embarassed at the sight of Mrs. Cregan. He murmured something of his regret at being compelled to do what must be so painful to her, and was proceed-as in our fortunes." "Talk not to me, sir," she said "of your regret or your reluctance. You have already done your worst torture on our memories. For months, for weeks, and days, my son spoke to you, laughed with you, and walked freely and openly among you, and then you laid no hand upon his You waited for his wedding day to raise your lying cry of murder, you waited to see how many the lady who could use them."

her head, with a smile of the most and your forbearance are extraordinary. All, the events of this night ies to the violence which he employed, Kyrle Daly bore the affrighted bride away from the apartment. He remained by her side during the whole evening, often soothing her anxiety by his ready eloquence, watching every movement of her mind, and feelings with the tender vigilance of a near and devoted relative. Mrs. Cregan, meanwhile remained alone in the room, her ear bent to catch the first sounds of approachcountered the bride alone.

ing

case.

st train into Cheyenne y over the Union Pa-pleted, Father Kelly er, in 1868, he had Catholic Church in tle town. In the fall r Kelly accompanied a to Rome, where he reat Vatican Council, l Catholic conventio Returning, he was rk in Lincoln in 1871, o for four years, when back to Omaha, where ationed ever since. ears past Father Kelired from the regular priesthood, owing to years and physical ineads a quiet and sehe parish house. He or too weak, how-warm interest in the der to which this strange occurrent hurch and to lend a mpathetic hand in her look and action the same y and well-doing. eem a wonderful thing priest had lived under pecially when we con IX. reigned thirty Leo XIII. twenty-five ly is only 85 year been born in 1818. idea of what a long f life must be.

open, and a female figure appeared, should have been a happy one, with hair disordered, and hands outspread with an action of warning and avoidance. "Hardress, my child!" "Well, mother?"

"Hardress, my child!"

"Mother, I am here!, Look on me! Speak to me! Do not gasp, and stare on your son in that horrid way! Oh, mother, speak, or you will break my heart!" "Fly-fly-my child. Not that way!

No! The doors are defended. There ant, act." is a soldier set on every entrance

You are trapt and caught. What shall we do? The window! Come this way-come-quick, quick!"

She drew him passively after her into her own sleeping-chamber, which lay immediately adjoining. Before Anne had made one movement the attitude of sudden fear and won-had given rise, Mrs. Cregan again appeared in the chamber, showing in ried and disordered energy of mind. The party entered the room. "Go to your room!" she said, ad dressing the bride. "Go quickly to 'I hope, your room; stop not to question

"Dear aunt!-"

"Away, I say! you will drive me frantic, girl! My reason is already stretched to its full tension, and a single touch may rend it. Go, thought of gloom and shame." "My duty." murmured the magis rate, "obliged me to sacrifice." "Complete your duty, then," said the mother haughtily, "and do not speak of your personal regrets.

shoulder.

justice and my son are foes, what place do you fill between them? You mistake your calling, Mr. Magistrate; you have no personal feeling in this transaction. You are a servant of the law, and, as a ser-

Mr. Warner bowed, and directed he soldiers to follow him into the inner room. At this order Mrs. Cregan turned her face over her should-with a ghastly smile. "That " she said in a tone of calm reproach, "that is my sleeping-

"My duty, madam." "Be it so," said Mrs. Cregan, in a low voice, and turning away her face with the same painful 'smile, while her heart crept and trembled. " said Captain Gibson. who really began to think that Mrs Cregan had a great deal of reason.

'I hope Mrs. Cregan will not blame for my part in this transaction. not blame you," said the nother with a scornful smile; "it

At this portentous moment,

"I do

ment.' "Madam!-"

"Our friends dispersed, our mirth so quickly changed to terror, this scene of confusion at our domestic would have the best of the argu-festivity, everything, sir, bears testimony to your forbearance. That sensitive and gentlemanly nature that is so tender of insinuations, appears in all the actions of this night. My husband tied there, like a malefac tor, and my poor son-Ah, shield and hide us, Earth! I hear his voice!"

A bustle was heard in the inner oom, and the wretched lady, throw ing her arms high above her head, uttered a shriek so loud, so shrill and piercing, that the stoutest soldier started like a maiden, and the flush of anger on the officer's cheek was changed to a death-like paleness. Half-sobered by the fearful sound, the intoxicated father rose from his chair, and turned a dull eye apon the room-door, while every fig ure on the scene expressed, in vari ous degrees, the same feeling of com-miseration and anxiety "The prisoner is here!" cried War et those words only be remembered Do you hear me, my dear mother?" "I do-I am listening. Speak, my child; I will remember well." Hardress stooped to her ear, and nurmured in a low voice; "In a secret drawer of my cabinet you find a paper unsealed. Give it to -" he paused, and bowed down a mo ment in deep agitation-"to Anne Chute; I am glad she bears name-glad of her fortune in escaning me. Let her read that paper. I have penned it with the view of ren dering justice to a confiding friend, whose confidence I have betrayed Oh, memory! memory!-but I must look forward now, not back. mother, if I had really known how to value your affectionate counsel in my childhood-if I had only humbled my heart to a belief in its own weakness, and a ready obedience to your will in my younger days, 1 should not die in my youth a shame /ul death, and leave you childless in your age." 'Aye," said Mrs. Cregan, "or if ] had done the duty of a mother; if I had thought less of your worldly, and more of your eternal happiness.

'You will hate me in your prison."

the order of his speech, and listlessness or apathy become the guerdon of his wanderings. He is mortified to find that what he mistook for in terest was only patience, and that the attention which he imagined be bestowed upon himself was only lavished on the automata which his fingers exercised.

Stern and brief, then, be the order of our speech henceforward. Hnhap pily a portion of our incidents will fit that manner well.

The remorse of Hardress led him even to exaggerate his own share in the transaction on which the foregoing measure were founded. Nevertheless, when all the circumstances of the case had been fully considered, the mercy of the executive was extended to his life, and as perpetual exile from his native land was the only forfeit which he paid to the outraged law. But before this alteration in his destiny had been announced to him, Hardress had learn ed to receive it with great indiffer With the austerity of an anence. cient penitent, he persisted in refusing to hold personal communication with any of his friends, his mother only excepted, and even she was cheated (by a necessary device, for her health could not have sustained it) of the last parting interview.

"Never?!" "I know what you will say when they are dragging you to the stat-had only the effect of sparing him

(Continued on Page Twee

My brain is scorched!" 'My dear fond parent, will you add "Never!!"