Fully Alive to the Question of Admitting

At a meeting of the National Federation of Butchers, held recently at Manchester, England, Mr. Charles E. Pearson, the president, dealing with the subject of free importation of Canadian cattle to England, said when this class of cattle was first introduced into that country, some years ago, it met a long felt want. The beasts were well-grown, full of condition, and plenty of bone, and when fattened for the market, were exactly what traders desired to purchase. Moreover, their introduction had the effect of reducing the price of store cattle from £2 or £3 per head. For some time past he had been more or less in communication with dif-ferent men interested in this particular line of the trade, and they said to him; "You butchers have only one object in view and that is to reuce the price of meat." He admitted that was their aim. They should use every effort and strain every nerve to effect reduction in the price. They were anxious to feed the public well with a plentiful supply of good meat. He thought if they could bring influence to bear upon the Government, and secure the free importation of Canadian cattle to England, would not only benefit themselves, but also their colonial bro-The Government could not be thers. forgetful of the way the Canadian troops had served in South Africa, and he thought the present was a

A Strange Interview. It was at his aunt's house, as Lord Dufferin a thousand times recounted, that Lord Melbourne met Disraeli for the first time. Those were early days and Disraeli, bursting with ambition had been unsuccessful in his at tempt to enter Parliament. After listening to his expression of disappointment Lord Melbourne said good naturedly, "Well, now, tell me, what do you want to be?" "I want to be Prime Minister," was the reply. Lord Melbourne, who did not expect at that time to be Premier himself, replied with an excessive seriousness: 'No chance of that in our time. No body can compete with Stapley when Lord Grey gives up." Carlyle'r Method of Work. Speaking of his method of work,

Carlyle said he had found the little wooden pegs which washerwomen employ to fasten clothes to a line highly convenient for keeping together bits of notes and agenda on the same special point. It was his habit to paste on a screen in his work-room engraved portraits, when no better could be had, of the people he was then writing about. It kept the image of the man steadily in view, and one must have a clear image of him in the mind before it was in the least possible to make him be seen

A Marshal's Retort. The Marshal de Bassompierre was employed by Henry IV. on several embassics. He once told the King embassies. The popular view of the relation of the blood to human character and cor the blood to human character and conduct is marked in many a familiar expression. We speak of there being "bad blood" between people at enmity, of "blue blood" as indicating ancestry, of "black blood" as describing a treacherous nature, and in many another phrase mark our belief that in the mental, moral and physical man, "the blood is the life." The one basis of a healthful, happy and useful life. of a healthful, happy and useful life is pure blood. With the blood pure disease has no permanent lodging place in the system. For this reason the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery rids the body of diseases which have their origin in impurity of the blood. It absolutely purifies the blood, carrying off the waste and pois onous matter, increasing the action of the blood making glands, and building up the body by supplying the blood in quantity and quality such as is essential to a condition of health. It cures ninety-eight people out of every hun-dred who give it a fair trial.
