ALAS, POOR JOE!

Balfour's Chamberlainism Diluted Sort.

(Montreal Star.) Quite as important as Mr. Balfour's speech at Birmingham, which has now eached Canada verbatim, is the editor ial of the London Times, dealing with it, in which the Thunderer lays particular emphasis upon Mr. Balfour's particular emphasis upon Mr. Balfour's contention that those within the Unionist party who are not tariff reformers should not be driven forth on that ground. The Times summarizes Mr. Balfour on this point as follows: "He declines to be a party to the ostracism of those who cannot yet accept tariff reform in its entirely. He is not a believer in the processes of the courtmartial. He declares it impossible to lay down in black and white the precise doctrines which entitle a man to be regarded as a member of the Unionist party; and he knows that in every party there are men who belong to it from the most various motives and on the most Partial apprehension of its total creed. Those who lag behind are to be won, not to be excommunicated." * " This is joyfully hailed by the London Spectator as a change of front on the part of the Times. It indicates the beginning of a tendency to keep the "free fooders" within the party rather than to drive them out of it. Yet it is perfectly obvious that a Unionist party which desires to keep its hold upon a section of public men, and their followers who are against anything approaching protection or a preference, will not be a very effective campaigner for a policy which avows a preference and smacks very ströngly of protection. As the Spectator points out, it is not contention that those within the Union and smacks very strongly of protection.
As the Spectator points out, it is not good tactics for a "forlorn hope" to carry along with it men who sincerely hope that its desperate effort will fail. The stouter policy, which was ready to com-along with it men who sincerely hope that its desperate effort will fail. The stouter policy, which was ready to compel anti-tariff reformers to walk the plank, had more promise in it.

We have never concealed our opinion that Mr. Balfour was temporising with the tariff question; and we see now no reason to abandon it. It was too strong, when led by Mr. Chamberlain, for the agile Prince Arthur to directly oppose it and keep his place as party leader. So it appeared to us that he played a waiting game, knowing that time was on his side and against the older man from Birmingham. The collapse of Mr. Chamberlain probably came sooner than anyone anticipated; but the movement he evoked has proven itself to be stronger. Still Mr. Balfour can wait. Still the forces which were only half-hearted and largely partizan in their acceptance of his gospel, must temporize. But we have got so far along now that the olive branch is held out very openly to the anti-preference people; and they, too, are encouraged to wait. Tariff reform is praised as a growing policy; but it is not to be the test of Unionism. A man may follow Mr. Balfour and oppose the preference. He had no such option in the case of Mr. Chamberlain. * * But the genins of Mr. Chamberlain is gone; and the movement lacks the patriotic swing ha would have given it. Hence there is a harking back. Raw materials are not to feel the new duties. Only productive industries are to be safeguarded against competition. This shifts the emphasis from preference to protection; and now we are treated to an effort to stay the exodus of free traders from the Unionis party. This is not the way in which great battles are fought and won.

In a literary career one of the greatest drawbacks is return noats.

SAINT ANDREW'S DAY.

(N. Y. Scottish American.)

Where'er we live, whate'er our lot,
Still will I plead and pray,
That Scot rejoice wi' brither Scot

Upon Saint Andrew's Day.

John Imlah.

Saturday first, the 30th inst, is Saint Andrew's Day—a day well remembered and annually celebrated by our countrymen, both at home and abroad. Yearly, too, at this time it falls to our lot to say something about the man and the occasion—not that we ever hope to add anything to our readers' information concerning Scotland's patron saint, nor that it is necessary to remind them of "The Day," nor to ask them to duly honor it, but simply because they wish us to do so, and that we take pleasure in complying.

As we have repeatedly stated there is us to do so, and that we take pleasure as in complying.

As we have repeatedly stated, there is relittle reliable information concerning the life of Saint Andrew. That he was the visit called of Christ's disciples seems beyond doubt, as also that he was the son of Jonas, a fisherman at Bethsaida, where Andrew is supposed to have been a born, but when is uncertain, though the peneral supposition is that it was about the year 10 B. C. The holy writ tells us that he was the brother of Peter, another disciple, but concerning his wanderings and doings with the Master it tells us almost nothing. Legend tells us that as a missionary he visited Russia in Europe, and the fact of his having been adopted as the patron saint of that country also might lead us to believe that he had, did we not know that so many legends and traditions exist concerning Saint Andrew, and that one flattly contradicts another. For long it was generally stated and believed that he was ultimately tried at Patras and condemned to death. There after severe sourging he was crucified, not on the then usual upright cross, but on one constructed of two pieces of wood crossed in the centre thus X (like the present Saint Andrew's cross), to which he was tied with cords. After his death, which is believed to have taken place on Nov. 30, A. D. 60, his remains were embalmed and interred near to where the Christians there had their meeting place. It is said: "This spot is now covered by a large cathedral, and in it is yet to be seen a plain wooden tomb, which local tradition states still holds the dust of the sainted missionary."

Patras has, therefore, become a favorite shrine with ministers in their pilgrimages to the East, and inquiries made by them there have led to considerable doubt being now entertained, not only regarding the verity of that tradition, but as to whether Saint Andrew ever lived, labored and was crucified there at all. Several years before his death the late Principal Tulloch visited Patras, and his investigations led him seriously to doubt it, or that his remains were afterwards transported to couttry, and does the most good in a quiet, unostentatious way. Its members, like those of the Scottish Corporation in London, England (which it strongly resembles) are all Scots wha hae, and none of them are likely ever to need any assistance from the society. The society is in its 152nd year, and has now 542 members. They are to meet in the Waldorf-Astoria here on Saturday, and over a grand banquet celebrate St. Andrew's Day.

WHEAT YIELD.

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 29.—(Special)—In commmunication from Charles C. Cas-le, warehouse commissioner, Winnipeg, a communication from Charles C. Castle, warehouse commissioner, Winnipeg, received at the Department of Trade and Commerce to-day, he says that the wheat yield may possibly work up to 70,000,000 bushels, and a percentage of the wheat crop from and under may work down to forty per cent. But, in regard to this, Mr. Castle says, it is a little too early to decide.

Toronto, Nov. 29 .- (Special) -The deence in the London conspiracy case continued to call evidence this morning to centradict the statements of the Crown witnesses. James Vance and Alex. Smith, Liberal organizers, denied all connection with Pritchett. Vance admitted that he worked in North Perth, and a protest was afterwards entered on the usual ground of bribery. "How much did you get out of North Waterloo?"

Waterloo?"
"Only my expense."
"How much passed through your hards?" A.—About three hundred and fifty dollars.
The witness added that most of the cash went to a man for cierical work.
"You were 2 solicitor and the Law Society struck you off the rolls?" A.—Yes.

"What for?" A.—I got into debt.

"Were you not struck off the rolls for misspropriating a client's funds?" A.

misoppropriating a chent's lunds?" A.—No.

Mr. Vance explained that he got financially embarrassed and had $500 of his client's funds in his possession at the time. When the Law Society took up the matter he made no defence, and was struck off the rolls.

To Mr. Johnston the witness made a fuller explanation. He had placed $500 in the bank in his account, and when he fail-! it was garnisheed. He gould not make up the amount to pay to his client and is a ke knew that would be the only alternative, he failed to appear before the Law Society. Since that time he had been paying off his debts, and intended to return the money to the client. The examination of M/c. Smith, former Liberal organizer, was a series of denials. er Liberal organizer, was a series of denials The witness said that he sent mier from one constituency to another wh.n. elections were in progress, but only to do clerical work. None had instructions to do anything corrupt. Smith admitted knowing Pritchett, but denied entering into his schemes.

Mr. Staunton began his cross-examination by asking if Smith knew a man named Threllkill.

Smith admitted that this man worked in various elections, but not under his instructions.

The telegram sent by O'Gorman asking Smith to visit London was taken up. The witness said that he went to London to ask O'Gorman about the men who were to be recalled in the South Ontairo trial. Mr. Staunton quoted from Smith's former evidence in the election trial, which contradicted, his new explanation.

"You now say that you went to see O'Gorman about the South Ontairo rice levilence in the South Ontairo trial. Mr. Suith the O'Gorman wanted you, which story is true?" asked Mr. Staunton.
