Abraham Lincoln's Mother. She taught him to spell and read. She instructed him in various ways. She was a most excellent Christian woman. She read to him every day from the Bible. Little Abe learned to read that he might do good. She taught him to be kind to animals as well as people. She cooked him appetizing meals from the game his father had taught him to shoot. He early learned from her constant teaching to be honest and upright, in short, to obey the Golden Rule. When, during her illness, she found she should not live she told him that he must keep God's day holy, tell the truth invariably, avoid all profane words, read a chapter of the Bible daily and say his prayers night and morning.
