

A GIRL IN A THOUSAND

"As a boy, yes. When I grew up I conquered this feeling, and have reason to believe I was not an insufferable bore in society, though I avoided its claims whenever I could. Then came the event that gave me the idea of going around the world at leisure, taking a couple of years to do it all—and I've been traveling ever since."

"She was looking at him strangely."

"You speak of it as though you had had trouble."

"Well, I have. No man was ever badgered more."

"And they say that no man has trouble but what, if you look deep enough, you'll find a woman at the bottom of it all."

"It was his turn to grow scarlet."

"He gave a nervous little laugh."

"By Jove, you are right. There was in my case, but I beg of you to believe it was not in the sense you mean. She was nothing to me, absolutely nothing. In fact, I always looked upon her as a bore, or as I might say, my bete noire."

"How strange!"

"Do you believe me?" he asked, sharply.

"Why, monsieur, as if I could do anything else. I am sure you look like a truthful man, but it is very peculiar. And you never told this young woman you wanted to be a brother to her?"

"I told her because I detested her! Good heavens, she had spoiled many a night's sleep for me, just thinking about her. Ugh! please drop the subject."

"Perhaps some day I shall meet her."

"He was struck dumb by the absurdity of it all, as he remembered the grim Miss Chester."

"I think you may," he said, finally, "and I promise, when the proper time comes, to tell you my miserable story. It would please me to know that you thought I did right. But it must wait until—well, we are longer acquainted."

"He had paused because he knew that the most appropriate time for this disclosure might mean when he was telling Miss Magde the state of his feelings toward her, and it was quite too early for such a rash avowal."

CHAPTER XXI.

"That morning drive was the most delightful experience in the whole life of Rex Grafton."

"He could have continued it indefinitely—always provided this charming character handled the ribbons and nestled at his side."

"Several times the conversation drifted back to the danger line. Rex was curious about the unknown camp who had persecuted the girl, and it would worry him constantly until she felt constrained to tell him all about it; but Miss Magde did not seem to feel enough confidence in the advent of a new brother to make a father confessor of him."

"So he was left to grope in darkness, tantalized by a well-kept mystery, and light which she unwittingly let fall upon the path."

"He learned that her determination to leave the classic precincts of London had been of a surprisingly sudden character. In fact, she had not been in the city for more than a few hours, and it was caused by a letter."

"That much she admitted."

"Rex hazarded a guess that in this letter she heard of the intended coming of the persecutor, and hence her desire to avoid one who had annoyed her in the past."

"What virtuous indignation that young man experienced,—what would he not have given to be able to meet this fellow as he stepped out of the railway carriage and wipped up the station floor with his gleaming remains. Perhaps, after all, it was just as well Miss Magde refused to give him any further satisfaction, for he was in a humor that could hardly be held accountable; she had said the other was a weakling, but even that might not save him from a severe thrashing such as a certain rooster girl and cause her so much annoyance."

"What hold had he upon her?"

"Was he an old flame, bent upon kindling anew the spark of love in her heart?"

"Ah! she said she detested him, but that might not mean she always detested him. Love sometimes turns to hate, and there might even have been a time when her shapely arms clung about the neck of this unprincipled scamp. Rex was sure he must be unprincipled,—and her ruby lips were given up freely to his caresses."

"Strange why he should shiver at the mere idea of such a possibility. He had never known such a girl as Miss Magde Moore existed forty hours before. Could it be the time was so very brief? Why, it seemed to this ardent lover as though he must have known her forever—at least, in his dreams she was no stranger."

"Well, he knew at least before that ride was over that this was a gone case—he felt ready to admit defiantly that he had been head over ears in love with the fair and demure dame who sat at his side."

"As yet her plans were not arranged—she promised to send him word—if he was possessed of the notion of doing a little travelling somewhere on the continent, who could raise any objection if he were of the party?"

"And Rex was satisfied."

"I have little to pack—can pay a visit right now to my bankers and arrange all necessary letters of credit. I'm quite ready to sudden move, you know," he said, cheerfully, as though pleased to be doing something—perhaps he remembered his recent resolve to live for others—that would apply to the present instance, for Miss Magde could be set down under such a general heading."

"Oh! I hope you won't regret it," she sighed, "and blame me for hinting at such a thing."

"Why, it's all my own doing. I'd have pushed myself in if necessary. Don't you ever dream that I'll cease to sing hallooing at the chance?"

"You'll call me bold, perhaps think I've never outgrown my girl life on the prairie, in spite of a Bryn Mawr College education?"

"I'll never think of you in any other light than as the most charming girl I ever knew; you must pardon me for saying it, but you forced me to defend myself, Miss Magde."

"She did not look very provoked; what girl would when the sincere tone of the speaker affirmed that the compliment came straight from his heart."

"There's the Duchess of Connaught driving," she said, ingeniously, and the awkwardness of their conversation was bridged over.

"All too soon Rex left her at the hotel. He felt as though walking upon air as he sauntered along Fleet street and the Strand, meaning to visit his banker and make some little arrangements that would cover his finances no matter where he turned his steps."

"About this time he remembered Bridgewater."

"The remarkable awakening was brought about by the appearance of the diplomat in the midst of the crowd, and his seizing the dreamer's arm."

"What's happening?" demanded the little man.

"Now why the deuce should you think anything had taken place; that is, anything out of the regular run of my fortunes," said Rex, peevishly. And Bridgewater, the heartless scamp, laughed with the disdainful air of a scoundrel."

"Well, you were walking on velvet, and you hardly knew how you were being jostled. One fellow with the manners of a coster gave you his elbow in the side. This was when Rex Grafton would have returned the favor with interest; but, as you only turned and smiled as sweetly at him as might a cherub, I say, old man, you're not sick, I hope?"

"Never was better."

"Then there's only one explanation. Heaven! I wonder how it will affect me. If I look half as astute as you acted, my business as a diplomat is ruined forever—no offence intended, remember, my boy."

"Then Rex woke up, laughed heartily, and slapped the other on the back."

"I was day dreaming—hang it, man, you see the intoxicating effect of nearly two hours in a dogcart alongside an angel. Never indulge in a dogcart, Bridgewater. The motion affects the brain a good deal like chloroform or ether."

"Go to, hypocrite! Fancy how you'd feel if the angel's place had been filled by another—say the delightful Miss Chester, for instance."

"Rex drew a long breath."

"You're a fool! But I confess it was the witchery of Miss Magde and not the motion of the blessed dogcart that turned my head."

"Tell me all about it."

"Rex looked at him and smiled."

"There are some things too sacred to confide even to a good friend like you, and these I leave to your imagination," he said, soberly.

"Bless my soul, I believe in his impulsive Yankee fashion he's already engaged you to marry the other."

"Oh! no, not quite so far as that, but ready to be as soon as the chance comes. There are some things I can tell you—in fact, I want your advice."

"Bridgewater showed interest in the case."

"He was decidedly taken with the fact that such a charming girl as Miss Magde Moore should be hounded and persecuted by some man."

"What have you concluded about him?" he asked.

"Rex gave his opinion that it was an old lover who refused to be shaken off. 'Nonsense—don't believe it,' snorted his friend."

"Well, you're keen enough about these puzzles, suppose you tell me what relation he occupies to the young lady?" demanded Rex, eagerly.

"You've said it—relation. I believe he's some cousin, or, perhaps, a miserable half-brother who has always been an enemy to her beauty, to such an extent that she desires to keep out of his reach."

"Hear, hear!" said Rex, after the encouraging fashion of the sage who was speaking.

"It's reasonable. She detests him, she says, yet not for the world does she want him injured. Didn't she compare your athletic figure to his attenuated one, to his disadvantage, and beg of you not to hurt him? Consider that enigma as good as solved, dear boy, and give me a handier nut to crack."

"Well," said Rex, desperately, "what's the outcome of the whole blessed business to be?"

"Easy as falling off a log. Presently you and the scamp who persecutes her must take a noble licking. Then you win the girl, defy Miss Chester, and that ridiculous will of your silly uncle and sail away over sunny seas, the happiest man, barring one, upon the face of the earth."

"By heaven you're a true prophet, Bridgewater—but why make any exception at all?"

"Because I hope to see you and go one better."

"Ah! you make progress with the arms, I assume?"

"Why not? I haven't made a study of women all these years for nothing. And the old gentleman favors me—that St. Michael Order has quite turned his Abyssinian head."

"Do you know who she is, yet, and what is her relation to the old general?"

"A granddaughter—his child married an Englishman, and Nance came as my wife, do you think she'd help or hinder you?"

"As a diplomat, you mean—hang it, I've given up all that. If I get what the rajah promised, I'm fixed financially to the end of time, and my life work will be to make Nance happy."

"Ah! you're made of the right stuff, I say—all honor to your sentiments, old chap—and how about the general—what the deuce brought him to London? Not a desire to make money, surely, or even to gull the foolish people who look in at his wondrous phylactery?"

"It's something deeper. I have imagined he is in contact with Menekel. You see, since Kitchener knocked the Kalifa out and recaptured Upper Egypt, the Abyssinians have been fearful lest their hill country, the oasis of that desert land. They've flirted with France, made overtures to Russia and kept an army in the field. I've been told that old ex-army officers that had the Boer trouble not broken out when it did we had have Abyssinia before now. That, I believe, is Ras Ragoula's real mission in London. He has means of keeping in touch with all that goes on in official circles, and frequently he is seen wishing out widderschyn to a dark-hatted traveller who goes to Port Said and below via a P. & O. steamer."

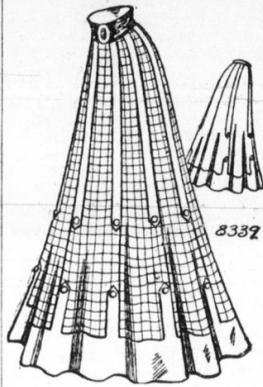

"Well, it's none of our affair. Meanwhile, the girl has been incited with the Salvation Army disease for rescuing wretched humanity. Does he object?"

"Not as far as I know. These people claim to be the only real Christians on earth. They have ceremonies in vogue, such as the ancient Jews used to practice round the Ark of the Covenant, and things we read about. She has been a big success, they tell me."

"I suppose you're quite pat with the soldiers and lassies of the army now?"

"Utterly impervious to such mosquito

GAS EXPLODED.

Twenty-Five Men Killed in Mine at Zegler, Ill.

Duquoin, Ill., Jan. 10.—A disastrous gas explosion in which twenty-five men lost their lives occurred to-day in Joseph Letzer's famous colliery at Zegler. A spark from a trolley, which set off an electric motor coming in contact with a pocket of gas, is given as the cause of the explosion. Eight bodies yet remain in the mine, but they will be recovered before morning, it is thought.

Joseph Letzer personally conducted the first relief party that descended into the mine to recover the bodies. The lone survivor of the explosion was an Italian youth, who escaped unharmed.

An expert who had been experimenting with the gas in the mines at Zegler, left on Wednesday, confident that he had placed the mine in a safe condition to be operated.

LEGs AMPUTATED.

Assaley, the Syrian Murderer, Not Expected to Live.

Montreal, Jan. 10.—Salem Assaley, the Syrian peddler who shot and killed his brother and tried to murder his sister-in-law at Hawkesbury on December 28th, had both his legs amputated yesterday at L'Original. Assaley spent five and five nights without food or water under a pile of wood in the shed adjoining the house where the deed was committed, and then dragged himself four miles along the road with both his legs frozen, only to be arrested on the train while on his way to Montreal. Assaley is not likely to recover from the operation.

MORE SHOCKS.

Butcher Rescued Alive After Two Weeks in Ruins.

Plan to Hasten the Evacuation of the Stricken Town.

Messina, Jan. 10.—After being a fortnight beneath the ruins of his home, a butcher, 63 years old, was rescued to-day in comparatively good health. He had witnessed the prolonged sufferings and deaths of his wife and four children, who were beside him during his entombment. A severe earthquake at one o'clock this morning ruined part of the sea wall. The survivors were panic-stricken.

The famous Triptych, painted by Antonello da Messina, which was the best work exhibited in the local gallery, has been recovered undamaged. The efforts to hasten the evacuation of Messina have been only partially successful. It has been found impossible to exclude the survivors by force, while the plan to cease the distribution of food, limiting its distribution to the ships, has proved to be practically useless. The survivors obstinately cling to the ruins. They say they would rather die from starvation than abandon their native city. Moreover, the soldiers share their ration with the hungry sufferers. The refugees, who are now scattered throughout Italy, are clamoring to return.

Notwithstanding the burials, disinfection is still going on, but the efforts to kill the odor are unavailing.

A severe storm at Reggio, to-night wrecked the improvised hut, the and scattered the meagre belongings of the refugees. Many boats were wrecked. The telegraph office was damaged. Many of the damaged walls fell standing by the earthquake were thrown down. A collision between two Italian warships off the shore was averted by stranding the Ru Umberto. It is reported that six persons were rescued from the ruins at Messina to-day, all of them desperately weak.

In accordance with instructions from the Archbishop, priests are traversing the ruins, praying for and absolving the dead with uplifted hands.

Gen. Mazza has adopted stringent measures in order to protect the people and their property, having established a police force in the city and ordered that any person found cavorting without a permit shall be shot.

RECORD FOR FINES.

Penalties Collected by Ontario License Officials.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—Over $300,000 in fines were collected by the Provincial license officials throughout Ontario during the year 1908. This constitutes a record amount and is ascribed to extra vigilance in the administration of the law, an official report indicates that the observance of the act has very generally improved.

The license year does not close until April 30, and consequently the official figures are not yet made up. From January to December, however, the total figures passed the thirty thousand mark. The nearest approach to this total was in 1906.

It is significant that of this total over $120,000 was secured as a result of convictions secured by Provincial Officer George Morrison, and nearly $8,000 by Provincial Officer Ayearts. The number of convictions secured by the one hundred and two local license inspectors added to the total, or one-third of the total received.

BURGLAR FIGHTS.

Niagara Falls Officer Catches a Man in a Grocery Store.

Niagara Falls, Jan. 10.—At 1 o'clock this morning Officer Farrell, of the city police force, found the back door of a grocery store, belonging to A. E. Dell, open. Entering the store, the policeman was gripped by a burglar, and only after a prolonged struggle did the officer down his man and convey him to the lock-up. The man gave his name as J. Hopkinson, living on Grey street. He is 25 years old, and married. Investigation showed that the man had gained an entry to the store by breaking the back window and forcing the cat-in. He had unlocked the back door, and made a hurried departure in case his operations were disturbed, and it was this which caused his discovery.

SIX MUST HANG.

Night Riders Condemned to Death—Two Get Twenty Years.

Union City, Tenn., Jan. 9.—Judge Jones to-day imposed the death penalty on Garrett Johnson, Tid Burton, Bob Ransom, Fred Pinson, Arthur Clear and Sam Applewhite, the Night Riders who were found guilty of the murder of Capt. Morris and Bob Huffman, the other defendants, to twenty years in the penitentiary. The Attorney for the defence immediately gave notice of an appeal to the State Supreme Court. If this tribunal does not interfere the first three men will be hanged on February 19.

Western Forger Sentenced.

TAR AND FEATHERS. FAMOUS BULLDOGS.

Drastic Measures to Get Rid of an Alleged Undesirable Citizen.

Thamesville, Ont., Jan. 10.—A house on the Seane side road, about five miles from here, was the scene of a "whitecap" outrage recently, when a party of men, wearing masks, dragged a man named Owens from his seat and drove him to a barn, where they cut out his ears and nostrils, the second to which he had been treated within a week, escorted him from the neighborhood to the accompaniment of revolvers shot.

Last night, Owens, who is nearly sixty years old, and who has a wife in that town, whom it is alleged he does not support, became very attentive to a 20-year-old girl in Widdowton, and a few weeks ago he accompanied her to her home on the Seane road, where they took up residence. The girl's father came here and laid a complaint before a justice of the peace, and as a result the two migrated to Morpeth, a village on Lake Erie, about twelve miles to the south.

At Morpeth the villagers took strong exception to their presence and on New Year's night a party took the man out and tarred and feathered him. The couple then returned to the paternal abode and again quartered themselves on the family.

This was a little too much for the neighbors. A "whitecap" party broke into the house, where they found the man and girl, and Owens was again smeared with tar and feathers liberally scattered over him. He was then given solemn warning that worse would befall him if he showed his face there again, and after an interval spent by the victim in removing as much of the tar as possible, he was driven away, several of his assailants firing their pistols as an additional deterrent to his reappearance.

Justice Tompkins has decided that Thaw is entitled to prove he is now sane.

TAR AND FEATHERS. FAMOUS BULLDOGS.

Lord Charles Beresford's Presents to Four of His Warhops.

London, Jan. 10.—Four battleships of the British navy have received New Year's gifts in the shape of bull pups presented by Admiral Charles Beresford. The pups are the progeny of Lord Charles' bulldog which bears the cryptic name of Sometime, and formed the subject of this signal, which the Commander-in-Chief of the Channel squadron made on Wednesday to the captains of the four battleships to which he presented the pups.

"I have not yet named the bulldog pups, but am calling them by the names of the battleships. The breed and pedigree of those pups will be sent to the ship's company later, but the owner of the sire has refused £2,000 for him."

Every British navy officer firmly believes that German navy officers regularly drink to the toast "The Day," which means the day on which Germany will pulverize Britain, and if the idea lying behind the name of the Beresford bulldog. Sometime, is carried out in christening the pups Teutonic wardrooms will have a good pendant to the story. Thus are the good relations between the two great nations encouraged.

President Fallieres is reported to have said when he ratified the death penalty: "If Frenchmen want blood they shall have it."
