Monday afternoon, John Smith, a well known city truckman, was driving down street with his three-year-old son on the seat beside him. His attention was attracted for a moment and when he looked back to the place where the child had been sitting, the seat was vacant. Looking down he saw the wheel of the heavy truck waggon just passing over the breast of his son. Everything was done that could be done but the child is probably fatally injured. Morphine had to be used, so great was the agony of the little fellow.

The Road Machine's Good Work,

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD: Having occasion to travel over a large part of the parish of Stanley about the time the government plough was working on the road, and hearing a great deal of adverse criticism in regard to its work, I thought I would try and see if the fault found was just. In order to do so, I took a section of road presided over by a new road surveyor, and as it is an old saying, and no doubt a true one, "a new broom sweeps clean," and the gentleman in question being a practical road-maker, I thought the test would be a

Now, here is the result: I measured th road by paces, and there were eleven hundred and thirty paces done by the plough whereas there were only two hundred and sixty-six paces done by hand-labor, and that, with some gravelling which I judged would equal one hundred and thirty-four paces, made in all four hundred paces.
