 QUEEN CLUB, Eng., July 11.
 With England and the United States tied at four victories each, Baker, of King's College, Cambridge, turned the scale for the Home Team by winning the one mile race. The run was the most exciting international university field contest yet witnessed. The staying power of the Englishmen at long running was decisive to-day. The only running event captured by the Americans was the half mile, won by Preble, of Harvard. Baker won the deciding event by 5 yards. Amid great enthusiasm the crowd swarmed on the field. The band played "God Save the King," and Baker was carried away on the shoulders of his comrades.

 Twenty were killed and seventy injured to-day in the wreck of the Federal Express fast passenger train over the New Haven Railroad, bound from Washington to Boston. The train jumped the tracks and rolled down a high viaduct into the street below. The St. Louis National League Baseball team, on the way to Boston, was in the last coach in the train, and all escaped injury.

 BERLIN, July 11.
 A statement telegraphed here from Paris, and credited to the Echo de Paris, to the effect that the United States had made representations to the German Government regarding Germany's intervention at Agadir, Morocco, setting forth that American interests in Panama would be endangered if Germany obtained a naval base in Southern Morocco, is unfounded. The Embassy has taken no steps in this direction of any character.

Laurier at Home.

Special to Evening Telegram.
 OTTAWA, To-Day.
 Premier Laurier returned to the capital last evening. In replying to the addresses he did not discuss the Imperial Conference or Canadian politics, but urged his fellow-citizens at Ottawa to make the Capital presentable for the coming of the Duke of Connaught, "The Royal Family," said Sir Wilfred, "is our greatest asset as a people. It is the British Crown which unites the self-governing nations, scattered all over the world in one common Empire." The Mayor of Ottawa declined to present a civic address of welcome to Sir Wilfred Laurier on the ground that the taking of such an official action, he would also have to welcome officially Mr. Borden, the Opposition leader.

Pretty Wedding.

A very pretty wedding took place at St. John's Church, Newton, Lower Falls, June 28th, the contracting parties being Mr. P. T. Coleman and Miss B. Ryan, both of Newfoundland. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. Callahan at Nuptial Mass. The bride was assisted by her sister, Miss M. A. Ryan, while Mr. R. Fowler acted as groomsmen. After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was partaken of at the bride's friends, Lower Falls, after which the happy couple left for their future home at Bathurst, Canada.

Jewels at the Durbar.

Precious Stones of Huge Value Lie Concealed in Indian Treasures.

400,000 For One Diamond—Indian Princes, Bedecked in Gems of Magnificent Splendor, Will Attend Great Function.

By a Traveller in the London Telegram.

The official keepers and protectors are already taking thought for the necessary transport of the Crown Jewels from London to Delhi. If the great Durbar of 1911 is destined to go down to history for no other reason, it will probably survive in the world's memory because of the surprising splendor of the jewels that will be there gathered together at Delhi. The more ideas that, after long and troublous wanderings, the Koh-i-nur will once more preside over the Durbar of an Emperor of India is enough to stir the blood by a pulsation of two that strange, ill-fated stone will remain paramount and unrivalled at Delhi, except in mere point of size, compared as a jewel with either of the Stars of Africa, the Koh-i-nur is, of course, but a splendid pebble. But these huge crystals are but newcomers in the galaxy of famous stones. They have still their spurs to win. If the phrase may be used, the terrible claims of the Koh-i-nur will nearly all the great jewels of the world possess. The Koh-i-nur has already a long past—and such a past! But apart from the distinction lent by these imperial gems, the jewels of the Indian princes who will be present at the Durbar would of themselves form an attraction that could be equalled nowhere else either in the world to-day or in history. It is difficult and invidious to make comparisons between them, but a suggestion of the huge wealth that lies concealed in Indian treasures in the form of jewels may be of some interest. The Nizam of Hyderabad, as befits the senior prince of India, owns the largest diamond. This, the "Nizam," is of 277 carats, and is the larger half of a much greater stone. It is either uncut or merely "fatted," and, therefore, would hardly be noticed among cut stones of half its size. The Nizam also owns another diamond, the "Victoria," of 180 carats, which, it is said, probably falsely, he bought some years ago for the enormous price of £400,000.

The Gaekwar of Baroda has three famous stones in his possession, the "Star of the South," the "Akbar Shah," and the "Eugenie." The first weighs 125 carats, and is a Brazilian crystal of the first water. In the rough it weighed 254. His Highness is said to have given £50,000 for it when cut. The second (sometimes it called the "Jehangir") is of about 74 carats. Somewhat unwisely it was recut as a brilliant. The last is a singularly fine stone of 51 carats, which, as its name implies, was once in the possession of the ex-Empress of the French.

The Maharaja of Patiala, perhaps still owns the famous Sancy diamond. This stone has had a chequered career. From Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, Emmanuel King of Portugal, and Nicholas de Marlay, Sieur de Sancy (who gave it its name), it seems to have passed through the hands, at one time or another, of our King James II.—who fled with it and of the Crown Jewels in 1688—of Louis XIV., of Louis XV., of Napoleon, of Napoleon's brother, Joseph King of Spain, Prince Dornidoff, and of the Maharaja of Patiala. It weighs a trifle over 53 carats. Another stone that has found its way back to India in recent years is the "Agra Diamond." Readers may remember that some twelve years ago it formed the subject of a curious law suit in London. It is of an exquisite form and rare color, and, in a guess, is about 35 carats in weight.

Other Jewels of India.—The Koh-i-Nur. This famous stone is a half-hundred fold as a rule, only a small part of it, and is often actually smaller than others, of the heirlooms in Indian places. Most of those I have mentioned have been re-acquired by India, because of their world-wide reputation. Yet somewhere in the treasury of a native chieftain, hidden up and uncut and loose, with imitation pearls, or set in cheap gilt mounts or even sewn, unpolished and uncut upon some discarded robe of State more splendid diamonds than these probably still exist. At the 1905 Durbar the Maharaja of Mysore surprised even Indian princes themselves. They had not realized their neighbors' wealth, and some parures, highly prized, seemed but little consequence there. To quote but one or two. I remember that the Maharaja of Darbhanga was wearing a jewel of the famous £90,000 necklace that Jang Bahadur, Regent and Marshal of Nepal, took from the terrified fugitive Nana Sahib. The pearls of Gwalior are famous, but it is seldom that the extremely modest taste of Scindia cares to put them on, and in consequence they cannot fall, sooner or later, to lose their condition. Besides a necklace of twelve or thirteen rows of perfectly matched pearls as large as filberts, the Prince of Gwalior wears on State occasions a curious case of crimson velvet depending from his left shoulder to his right knee, the material of which is almost hidden by similar stones. The only native chief who can "call" Scindia in the matter of pearls is perhaps the Maharaja of Travancore. His dominions about the Ceylon pearl-fisheries for one thing, and, for another, he claims the throne by female descent. These two advantages have endowed the Maharaja with a parure of pearls with which the finest of European sets, though no doubt in more beautiful condition, cannot for a moment be compared. I remember, too, seeing at Delhi a sword hilt cut from a single emerald. It was hardly conspicuous.

Perhaps the visitors to the Durbar will make no unworthy addition to this exhibition of bright stones. The Maharaja of Nepal, whose emeralds started London three years ago, will be there. There, too, will be some of the finest English gems in private hands. If a certain Duchess attends the ceremony she will have the curious sensation that another great diamond, the "Naski," which once formed part of the same collection as that to which the "Naulakha" belonged, has temporarily gone back to its old home, and is once more adorning the same durbar, with its old companion, the necklace of the butcher Nana. Another very famous Indian diamond may perhaps revisit Delhi from the banks of the Thames. Moreover, a certain English Peeress would cause some interest if she were present and wore the famous polished, but uncut, ruby that bears the names of Akbar and his Imperial successors. There are several of these huge rubies, one being in the possession of His Majesty, and two or three are known to be in the Dholpur treasury; but his lady's is probably the largest and finest in existence. It is perhaps an inch and a quarter in length and half an inch in width and depth.

The Koh-i-Nur.—But this reference to royal jewels brings me abruptly to the greatest diamonds of all. As I have said, the first place is at right due to the Koh-i-Nur. The history of the stone since it has been definitely identified is familiar enough. We all know that it was the chief jewel of the Mogul Emperors, and how, in later years, our Prince obtained it from his brother, by exchange for diamonds and rubies, and how the official deputed to bring it to England after the Sikh wars accidentally sent it to the wash with his waistcoat. Nor do we forget that the size of the stone was severely reduced (from 186 carats to 106) by the re-cutting ordered by the Prince Consort; and the occasional exhibition of the gem at the opening of Parliament or other ceremonial occasions has made the English people already well acquainted with the most famous diamond in the world. But a sale of mystery, which has not even yet been dispersed, hangs about it for a long time hung round certain periods of its history. Turnover, a French jeweller of observation and capacity, reported that in the seventeenth century he had seen in India a huge diamond belonging to the Emperor of the West Indies, and that he had seen it in 1775, and had estimated its value at £879,245 19s. 1½d. It was either uncut or merely "fatted" on one side—he compares it somewhere to an egg cut in half. One Horstenc Borgin, a dishonest or unskilful

Italian diamond cutter, was then called in, and recut it to 268 (or 280) carats. He nearly lost his head when the Emperor saw what had been done to his favorite gem. It is possible that there was some cause for his anger. It is considered by many experts that the Orloff diamond, said by some to have been the eye of an idol at Sirrangam, of the Russian regalia (193 carats in weight and cut, as the Koh-i-Nur originally was, in what may be called a decenter-stopper pattern), and a large fragment of 132 carats—recovered by Abbas Mirza on the taking of Kucan, an old capital of Khorasan, in Persia—may have been cut from the remains of the Mogul diamond. However this may be, the Koh-i-Nur, which Ranjit Singh used sometimes to wear in the socket of his blind eye, continued to represent the original gem, and remains to this day the symbol of imperial authority.

Other Great Jewels.—But though, historically, the return of the Koh-i-Nur to India will, in native eyes, set the final seal upon the great ceremony at Delhi, some of the other gems that will accompany it will not fail to produce their effect upon a people that is more accustomed to symbolism than ourselves. The great Agincourt ruby—won and worn in England long before the Moguls introduced splendor of life into the imperial palaces that they built so lavishly—will be watched with keen interest by Rajput eyes as it glows from the central cross of the English crown. The sapphire that was bequeathed back to the regalia by the Stuart Cardinal of York may touch their imagination, too, but the pale sapphire in the topmost cross above the orb is a glittering testimony to the perpetuity of a throne than anything they have ever known in India. For it came from the Confessor's tomb in Westminster Abbey, and has a 100-year-old record behind it.

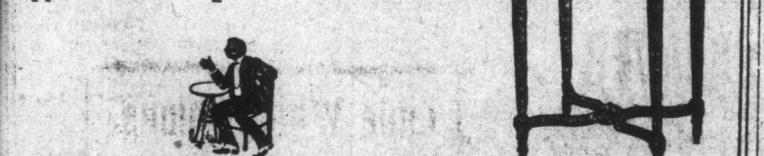

But when all is said, it is to the new unhistorical Stars of Africa that the triumph of the Durbar will belong. In a way they will bring home to the native of India the majesty of the occasion better than proclamations, or

A Valuable Find.

From passengers who arrived here by yesterday's train we learn that a man named Gooby, of Northern Bight made a valuable find in a thick wood some miles from that place last week. It was no less than the discovery of the lair of a black fox where there was a brood of young of the same species. In a very ingenious way he caught the old fox and his litter of young alive. He has them now all in his possession and will scoop a rich harvest from them, as the pelts of these foxes are very valuable. He is seriously considering the advisability of starting a fox farm with these and rearing only this particular species.
