"Something to Think About"

A tale of green leaves and gay streets, of blind youth and grim reckoning; of love, luxury, beauty—and something else that never before has appeared in a Motion Picture.

Our Canadian Letter.

Since I wrote you last from Toronto, I have lived for a short time in another Ontario town, the beautiful little city of Belleville, a place of about ten thousand people on the shores of the Bay of Quinte, and am now at the commercial metropolis of Canada.

Belleville is a town worth a brief description. There are other Ontario towns as beautiful, but it certainly ranks high among the number. The town is divided into east and west by the Moira river, and is situated on the shores of the Bay of Quinte, a lagoon of Lake Ontario, formed by Prince Edward County, an island which lies off the shore and almost joins the mainland. Belleville is connected to it by a steel bridge of considerable over a mile in length. Industrially Belleville is "slow," but it is the centre of a great cheese producing country and the growth of this industry is to a large extent due to Mr. Elliott, the Manager of the Standard Bank whose efforts to promote Belleville's cheese exportations have been indefatigable. It will interest you to know that Mr. Elliott is moreover a Newfoundlander. You find 'em everywhere, and I think the Newfoundlander's motto should be that of the R. A. "Ubique."

In the office of the City Gas Co., I also met another former resident of your town, Mr. Rowland, who is a trusted employee of the Council, and has been many years a resident of Belleville. A brother, Mr. Charles Rowland still lives at Gander Bay, Newfoundland.

Belleville can be only seen from its approach as a few church spires arising from a forest of trees. Its streets are beautifully shady and quiet; there are no street cars with their rattle and clash, and the residents all seem to be pretty comfortably off. While it is not decaying, it has, however, just about maintained its same population for years.

Montreal I can write you more of after a longer sojourn. At present it would be presumptuous for me to attempt to describe a city that extends thirteen miles. It is different from Toronto in that it is made up of a number of suburban towns under its municipality. Toronto was homogeneous. Montreal is too extensive to be all one as Toronto is, and one meets Montreal quite a long way out in the country.

Toronto is level, clean—generally speaking—respectable, and has a general air of not standing for anything that is not perfectly commensurate. There are no hills, and one hardly ever sees a stone, the whole soil being sand or mud. There are few horses, and the absence of horse-drawn vehicles helps to make for clean streets.

Montreal is more untidy. Its sidewalks are ill-kept, its streets dirtier because of a large amount of horse-drawn vehicular traffic. Its street car service is not so good as Toronto's is getting to be with its new large cars. It has—delightful to the ear of folks who live in "dry" countries—open beer shops from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. "Hard stuff" is only sold at the Licensed Commission Stores from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., however, and from 9 to noon on Saturdays. Montreal has moreover, hills. Back of the city stands the mountains, and from the top one can get a splendid birds-eye view of this commercial metropolis. Moreover, for one used to the rocky cliffs of Newfoundland, one can see a few rocks, which break the monotony after Toronto's smooth symmetry. Commercially Montreal seems to be prosperous. It is more of a manufacturing centre than Toronto, and the fact that it is an ocean port—at least for the summer—helps, no doubt, towards its prosperity. Perhaps what prohibitionists would call its ill-gotten gains from the open sale of booze which attracts a great many additional dollars from dry Americans on the other side of the St. Lawrence help in no small measure. Some idea of its traffic may be gathered, however, from the fact that the Customs and Excise collections for yesterday for the port of Montreal exceeded a million dollars—actually $1,029,119.71. The Provincial Parliament for Quebec province has just opened, and a registration of voters is being announced an election for the Provincial House is expected this fall.

Prince Provides New Vernacular for Golfers

LONDON.—The Prince of Wales established another great bond of sympathy with thousands of his countrymen recently when he duffed a shot that was heard around the golfer's world. This happened in the latter part of September at St. Andrews as he was "playing himself in" as captain of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club. To-day, thousands of duffers at golf are rejoicing at the enrichment of the golfing vernacular by a phrase used on a course near London, shortly after the news had been received of the prince's ordeal at St. Andrews. A player scoffed his shot and remarked: "Ah, that was a Prince of Wales!" This phrase is likely to be generally applied to a drive which moves a considerable amount of turf as well as the golf ball.

eventually will graduate and fill the vacant posts.

Hat for Women Motorists Patented in England.

LONDON.—A motoring hat for women has just been invented, and patented, which is claimed to protect women's hair from the effects of wind and rain. It is designed on the lines of a man's flying helmet; is made of silk and fitted with a silk hood over the back, and small pads over the ears. The hood and pads are detachable and it is claimed the wearer can finish a long motor tour looking and feeling perfectly tidy and without a headache.

Storm Compelled Kyle to Return to Port.

GREAT WAVES SWEEP SHIPS' DECKS.

S. S. Kyle, bound from this port to Port aux Basques, was driven back into this harbor last night by the heavy seas, which she encountered just outside of Cranberry Head last night, says the North Sydney Herald of Nov. 3. The steamer was delayed here a few minutes over her scheduled sailing time and on putting to sea ran into the teeth of the nor'easter, which was blowing at a high velocity. After passing Cranberry long combing waves were run into and after the ship had buried her high forecastle in several, Capt. Stevenson decided not to risk the passage. As the ship entered the rough water a passenger named Stickland of Rose Blanche, was thrown across the smoke-laden cabin by the sudden roll. On the ship's return to port the officials of the ship called for medical aid and Dr. Daniel MacDonald dressed the man's hurt, which proved to be a superficial scalp wound. The passenger, however, was highly pleased at the kind treatment shown him by the company.

Match Background

In some large quarries in Britain it has been observed that certain species of night-flying moths frequent these places during the summer. The moths lie flat against the rocks, which they match perfectly in color, and are practically invisible. This instance is peculiarly noteworthy in the fact that these quarries contain colored stone which is unknown elsewhere and the further fact that less than 100 years since the quarries were opened.—Scientific American.
