DR. BALL.

By the Author of "Molly Bawn."

"You know him intimately, of course," said the bishop, after a short pause, alluding to Gerald Wygram. "You can give me an honest sketch of him as he appears to you. I have faith in your judgement; you have seen much of him, no doubt. As guardian to Miss Vane I am desirous of looking into both sides of the question. Her happiness should be a first consideration. Now," leaning one elbow on the table and looking fixedly at the devoted curate, "give me your exact opinion of this young man."

A deadly silence followed. Now or never the unfortunate curate felt was the moment in which to break into laudatory phrases about Dulcinea's lover. But none would come. He opened his lips; he tried to focus his thoughts. In vain!

"I think I never met so good a young man," he said in a tone so solemn, it might have come from the dead. To the bishop the sound was earnest, to Dr. Ball it meant despair.

"Indeed, indeed!" said the former, who was fond of reiteration. He said it impatiently, and got up and began to pace the floor. He was a good-hearted man, and something within him seemed to warn him against forbidding the happiness of two people praised by the best man in his diocese. "It is a great responsibility," he said, striding slowly up and down the room. "He—this Mr. Wygram—has a bare subsistence, no prospects; and she has close upon £5,000 a year. She ought to marry a title. Her father was bent on it; he as good as said so to me just a month before his death. This, that you speak of, is not a thing to be lightly done. But you give me such a high character of Mr. Wygram—you have bestowed indeed such unqualified praise on both him and Miss Vane—that you make me hesitate about refusing my consent. Who am I, that I should take it upon me to make or mar two lives? You have no doubt in your mind about their suitability to each other, have you? You, who know them, you think highly of both?"

Again the bishop leaned towards him. Again that concentrated gaze fell upon the luckless curate. Again he felt that he must speak when speech was denied him. The bishop was waiting. Oh, the agony of knowing he was waiting!

"I believe it would be hard to find two such good young people," he said at last; and then he covered his face with his hands, and felt that now indeed it was all over, and that he was on the verge of tears.

There was a long silence. Then—"Well, well, well," said the bishop, "I promise you to think it over. Worth, such as you have ascribed to this young man, should count before anything." It really did seem to the bishop that Dr. Ball had uttered unlimited words of commendation about Gerald Wygram. "And he is of good birth undoubtedly. That is always something, even nowadays. Yes, I'll think it over. When you return home, Dr. Ball, which," courteously, "I hope will not be for some time yet, tell Dulcinea from me that I shall come and stay with her at the Hall very soon for a day or so, to talk all this over, and that I shall ask Mr. Wygram here to study him a little before giving my final decision. Tell her, too"—with a kindly smile directed at the astonished curate, "that it was your hearty praise of Mr. Wygram that induced me to look into a matter that I cannot help considering a little imprudent."

"This will be good news for Dulcinea, my lord," said the curate, finding his voice at last when it was too late. But was it too late?

"I hope it will continue to be good news all her life," said the bishop with a sigh. He knew he would be glad to get rid of his guardian duties, and for that very reason was afraid to get rid of them. But now for another topic," he said cheerfully, laying his hand on the curate's shoulder. "You know the rector of Dreena is dead,——" In fact he offered our little friend a rectory, with an income that quadrupled his present salary. But the doctor shrank from him when he mentioned it.

"Nay, nay, my lord," said he, "give it to some better man."

"I couldn't," said the bishop.

"Give it to some better man," said the curate earnestly. "I could not leave my present place, indeed. They could not get on without me; they are, for the most part, so old and so cross. I beg you will leave me there, with my old men and women. They all know me and I know them; and it is too late for me to begin the world afresh, with new faces and new interests."

The bishop said nothing further then, but took his arm and led him into the drawing-room, where presently he drew his wife aside and told her all about it. After which, Mrs. Craik made a great deal of the little doctor, and treated him delicately, as if he was of extreme value; as indeed he was.

At the end of two days he went home, and told Dulcinea all the news, and she, on hearing it, took him around the neck and kissed him tenderly.

"I knew it," she said. "I felt it. Something told me you were the one person in the world to win my case for me. Dearest, sweetest, loveliest Dr. Ball, how shall I thank you?"

"My dear, if you only knew," faltered the doctor.

"I do know. Don't you think I can appreciate you after all these years? You are so clear, so convincing. You can come so directly to the point. You can say so much that is good."

"I can indeed," groaned the curate, desolated by dismal recollections. The little I did say was all 'good'!"

"I'm sure of it," gratefully. Your fluency, you know, is your great point. How I should have liked to have heard you parrying successfully every one of those horrid old bishop's attacks upon my Gerald. But, indeed, it seems to me that I can hear you—running through all his good qualities (and what a number he has) in that nice, eloquent, self-possessed manner that belongs to you."

"Dulcinea, hear me," said the curate, in desperation; and then and there he made his confession. But he failed to convince Dulcinea; she steadfastly adhered to her belief that his eloquence alone had won the bishop's consent.

"And really he can't be such a very bad old man after all" she said, "or he would not be capable of appreciating real worth such as yours—would he, Gerald?" For Mr. Wygram had stolen up to them in the twilight,, and secured the doctor's other arm. Miss Vane looked upon his right one in the right of a free-simple property.

"It is the one redeeming point in his character," said Mr. Wygram, promptly. "And another thing, Dulcie, nobody shall marry us but Dr. Ball. Eh?"

"Nobody, indeed," firmly.

"My dear girl, nonsense!" said the doctor. "You must have your rector, if not the bishop himself. And—of course, by-the-by, being your guardian, it will be the bishop. I am a mere nobody. It would not do at all; and you, the most influential—that is, at least, the largest proprietor in the country round."

"You may call yourself a 'nobody' or any other bad name you like," said Dulcinea earnestly, but I can tell you this—no one but you shall ever mike me Mrs. Gerald Wygram."

"Nothing can alter that decision—not even the archbishop," said Mr. Wygram emphatically. The doctor protested, but in his soul he was pleased, and went to bed as—I was going to say a king; but indeed, I believe he went there ten times happier than that care-laden mortal.

And the morning brought him news. The old man, his rector, lay dead in an Italian town, and the bishop had appointed Dr. Ball as his successor. "So you need not leave those happy old men and women who call you pastor," wrote the bishop kindly—almost tenderly.

So it was as rector, not as curate, he made his dear girl Dulcinea Wygram.

(THE END.)

The Queen Pawned Her Jewels.

Queen Isabella of Spain pawned her jewels to raise money to fit out the expedition that discovered the new world. Her sacrifice was not greater than is made by many women of America, who deny themselves many things in order to have money to buy Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for their sick husbands or children. This "Discovery" is more important to them than the one made in 1492. For all diseases of the Lungs, Liver, Throat or Stomach, the "Discovery" is a sovereign remedy. A trial convinces, its continued use cures. It purifies the blood, invigorates the liver and strengthens and builds up the whole system. Guaranteed to benefit or cure in every case, or money paid for it returned.

Genius is sometimes contagious, as is shown by the appearance of Lillian Russell's coachman in Shakespearian roles on the stage in New York. His former mistress says he always did handle his lines well.

Talk on the Bright Side of Things by the Brooklyn Preacher.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, the famous Brooklyn preacher, faced a magnificent audience at the Auditorium last evening. His subject was "The Bright Side of Things." The closing section was a thrillingly eloquent description of the end of the world and the triumph of truth. These are some of the epigrams with which his stories were pinned together:

The most repulsive face on the earth is the fault-finder's.

The heart right, all right; the heart wrong, all wrong.

It's the owl's business to hoot, the frog's to croak and the bear's to growl; neither of these occupations has a place in the human heart.
