Written in Munson's System by J. Bruce, Toronto.

The first column of the phraseography section contains several lines of shorthand notation. The notation consists of various symbols, including loops, dots, and lines, arranged in a way that suggests a sequence of words or phrases. The symbols are written on a set of horizontal lines, which helps to define their vertical placement and orientation.

The second column of the phraseography section also contains several lines of shorthand notation, similar to the first column. The symbols are more complex and varied, including many loops and dots, and are arranged in a way that suggests a sequence of words or phrases. The notation is written on a set of horizontal lines, which helps to define their vertical placement and orientation.
