CONTEMPORARY CHURCH OPINION.

The Church News of St. Louis, Mo., says:

To intensify and broaden the life of the Christian is the central idea and purpose of the Lenten season. It does not mean a difference in kind of Christian experience and activity, but a difference of quality and quantity ; deeper, stronger, wider, quicker in life and more sensi tive to spiritual influences and the sense of duty. Nor does it mean that a little extra devotion for forty days will do up one's religion regulations with regard to the observance of for the whole year; rather it is intended to Lent, which come down to ne with the appl pine no norrow for an and the in incontract of point of point and the incontract of the formation of the for

Tun Irish Ecclesiastical Gozette says of the proceedings against the Bishop of Lincoln. The Church of England has always distinguished itself by opposing its most earnest men. So was it with respect to John Wesley in the last century, and so is it now with respect to Dr. King, Bishop of Lincoln. A great deal was made last week of "the manual acts," and the importance of the congregation being able to see them. But it is remarkable that these same manual acts were suppressed as superstitions, in the second and most Protestant Prayer Book of Edward VI. Now, the Church Association, through its Counsel, is arguing that it is essential that these acts should be done so as to be seen by the congregation. It is conceded by Counsel for the pro secution, that the mixed cup may be used, provided the water is added before the service, and the ablutions may go on in the vestry, though forbiddon in the church. Really, when the matter is regarded with an unprejudiced eye, it must be conceded that the great legalists and ceremonialists in these matters, are the members of the Church Association, who would lay down a hard and fast line on either side of its it meaning the impossible to mass. the result of the present action will not be to render more elastic rather than more restrictive the Use of the Church of England in such matters. An increasing tendency is showing itself to interpret the present Prayer Book in the light of those which have gone be-fore, and to take an ecleotic view of the ceremonial of the Church of England. It is impossible that future judgments will not be enormously affected by the results one way or the other of the present Lambeth trial, an epochal event as it is in the history of the Church.

MARRIAGES IN LENT.

BY THE REV. DR. WIEGMAN, RUBAL DEAN.

A puper read before the Ruri-Decanal Chapter of the Rural Deanery of Port Elizabeth, South Africa.

When a custom, based on the Canons of the Primitive Church, comes Jown to us with the universal consent of the Church from primitive times to the present day, we conclude that the Church has proved the value of that special rule or custom, and we cannot, as loyal Church. men, reject what the practical experience of eighteen centuries has sealed with its approval and consent. There are certain canonical Canon of the Council of Laodiczea, which forbide Lenten marriages. After forbidding pub-lic games during Lent (Canon 51) it forbids the celebration of birthdays and marriages during Lent, Birthdays in the fourth century were kept with a grand birthday feast, which was out of place amidst the solemnity and self-discipline of the Lenten scason. Marriages involve a time of rejoicing and a marriage feast, innocent enough in due season, as our Lord's presence at the marriage feast of Cana indicated, but, like the birthday feast, out of place in Lent. Here is the common sense reason which has made the Laodicene Canon forbidding Lenten marriages the universal rule of Christendom.

We have now to deal with this Canon as it affected the Church of England. Our National Church did not accept the whole body of the Canon Law of the Western Church. The local councis of the Church of England passed Canons which supplemented the universally accepted body of Primitive Canon Law, and which were locally binding. In the year 1003 the National Church held a council at Eynsham, in Oxfordshire, under St. Alphege, the courageous Archbiehop of Canterbury, who was murdered shortly afterwards by the Danes. England was in daily peril of Danish invasion, and the lines of ecclesiastical discipline were drawn tighter by the imminent danger of the Church and nation. The Laodicene prohibition of Lenten marriages was extended and amplified by forbidding marriages from Advent duct of divine service must defeat itself in the place in the Canon Law of Lynwood, our great to be celebrated in Lent,

English canonist, and also, as is well known, in the rubric of the Sarum Manual. But St. Alphege and his bishops had no primitive warrant for these restrictions. There is a doubtful Canon of the Council of Lerida, A.D. 524, forbidding marriage from Advent to Epiphany, and also during the three weeks preceding the festival of St. John the Baptist.

But if we frame rules upon the authority of a doubtful Canon, we run the risk of "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men," in. stead of following the undisputed law of the Church.

We have now to deal with the Post-Reformation usage of the Church of England with regard to Lenten marriages. Although the Sarum rubric specifying the "prohibited times" was not re-enacted, the Lenten prohibition re-mained as an unwritten law of the Church. The other "prohibited times" were also in some cases observed and Bishop Cosin desired to re enact them in 1662. Although this was not done, the Lenten prohibition was consider. ed to be in full force, so far as the usage of the Church went, and, although the period of the Commonwealth had relaxed all Church discipline, this prohibition was generally observed.

The Church of Ireland, in 1632, in its Canon on Marriage, contained these words as to "prohibited times :" "Neither in the time of Lent, nor of any public fast, nor of the solemn festivities of the Nativity, Resurrection, and As-cension of our Lord, or of the Descension of the Holy Ghost." The Irish Church thus adopted a more stringent rule than the Church of Hogland of the solur day, so here solution for 1 C. Berneye Sugar

(2) A set of the se with the prohibited times for marriage. The Bill was lost. Convocation also made an at tempt in the same direction in 1575, moved doubtless by Paritan pressure. This attempt was also frustrated, and since that time no efforts have been made in convocation or Parliament to attack the principle of "a prohibited time" for marriages. Post Reformation evi-dence might be multiplied. Parish register books had "the prohibited times" written in them as a reminder to clorgy and people. Bishops, in their articles of enquiry, asked whether they were observed, and, as late as 1760, we find Archbishop Sharpe, of York, speaking of the observance of these prohibitions. The habit of disregarding them seems to have been formed during the period of laxity that closed the 18th century. The first to go were, of course, the prohibitions which did not rest on primitive authority. The feeling. against Lenten marriages probably lingered on till the days of Oxford Movement of 1833 Since then we have, in a great measure, been able to restore this primitive rule of the Church. I do not think that it is wise to press for more than the Lenten prohibition. We may say to our people with regard to the other "prohibited times," that they were observed for centuries in the Church of England.

More we cannot say, and a fierce insistence upon rules that are not primitive, will undoubtedly endanger the observance of the one primitive prohibition.

There is no rule without its exception, and exceptio probat regulam. There are cases which may occur in which immediate marriage, as an act of reparation, is the only course open. A marriage under these circumstances is without its feast or outward merriment and should be solemnized merely in the presence of the witnesses required by law. Such a marriage as this, by leave of the bishop, might and ought
