DRY GOODS IN TORONTO

The situation for domestic cotton ods is very firm, says the Toronto Globe in its weekly review of dry goods in that city. Canadian mills refuse to make price concessions. The uncertainties attending the crop forbid anything of that kind. to the wind to allow of any such inducement to stimulate business, and anyhow there is no necessity because of the fact that they have no surplus stocks on hand, and have all the business in on their books they are now able to take care of. Deliveries of iomestic lines are generally fair. An exception is cotton blankets. Advices from a buyer for a leading house here who is now in the old country say that cotton goods there are very firmly held. Holders over there, in fact, appear to be stronger than Canadian makers. This is especially noticeable in fancy prints.

The uncertainty over the immediate future of the cotton markets is by no means over. The crop in the Unitation of the cotton markets is not not markets of the cotton that the cotton of the co future of the cotton markets is by no means over. The crop in the Unit-vances made by makers in the United States.
