

"Et vous confesserez des filles
 "Plus jolies, plus jolies que moi;
 "Et tu penseras des filles
 "Plus jolies, plus jolies que moi."

"Non, ma belle, je penserais toujours a toi!"

This is for two voices—for a priest and a young lady, to whom he has been Confessor. The occasion of the song is his departure for the United States, which are often called l'Amerique, (America,) in Canada.

Lady—"My dear father is going to America."
 (Then came in several lines which I forget.)

Priest—"I will describe the ladies, and so you shall get news from me."

Lady—"But there are in America
 Ladies more fair, more fair than me;
 And you will confess ladies
 More fair, more fair than me;
 And you will think of ladies
 More fair, more fair than me."

Priest—"Oh no, my fair, I shall always think of you"

I ha
 sures"
 tion to incide
 while ceding
 many quant ferent
 limits
 best ju
 to my thing
 So
 truth,
 to avo
 what some wanto
 ral pe
 I hav
 they l
 Th
 not al