MASS ATTACKS FAIL TO SHAKE BRITONS IN AREA OF CORBIE

Terrible Artillery Defence Probably Postponed Time of German Onset.

COUNTER-DRIVE GAINS

Enemy Loses Ground in Sharp Engagement Near Aveluy Wood.

With the British Army in Franco, April 7.—The enemy infantry continued its mass attacks just east of Corbie on the Somme during the early hours yesterday, and there was every indication that a heavy assault would be made. At noon, however, it was stated that the storm had not yet broken.

In the meantime the British artillery was maintaining a terrible bombardment of the enemy's assembling places, and it is possible that this may have delayed the onslaught.

North of the Somme the most important event thus far reported was a British counter-attack southwest of Aveluy Wood, in which some ground was regained after a sharp engagement.

The enemy Saturday continued to make raids along the northern section of the battle front for the purpose of learning what British troops were opposing them. German prisoners captured on April 3 declared that their latest orders were to be ready to push on further, but, so well was the secrecy of the plans preserved, they knew nothing more of the impending operations. That there would be another drive shortly, however, seemed to be the general opinion.

The German casualties in the fight—ing in the Albert sector Friday were very heavy. At numerous places it was possible with the naked eye to see them forming for the attack, and in every case the British artillery and machine guns played havoc among the assembling troops.

Near Hebuterne German concentrations were caught in machine gun barrages on three occasions and badly smashed. Lassigny Farm, south of Hebuterne, also was the scene of very heavy fighting on Friday before the Germans finally regained it. No less than three attacks were delivered against the British positions. The first two were repulsed, but the third, which was delivered with large forces, compelled the British to fall back a little and abandon the place to the enemy.

The British artillery continued to pound the Germans all along the battle front. An example of the fine work being done by the gunners is to be seen at Ervillers, which the Germans have been forced to abandon because of the heavy fire. Mory has also been made virtually untenable, and other places are not very comfortable.

It was apparent on Friday before the attack began that the Germans would attempt an advance, and the British artillery concentrated on all known places of assembly with a tremendous bombardment. This undoubtedly weakened the assault which followed.

Spectacular Feature.

A spectacular feature of the fighting developed at Ville-sur-Ancres, below Crunacourt. At this point the British troops who were advancing for a counter-attack clashed in open ground with Germans who were coming forward for another drive at the British line. Hand-to-hand fighting of the bitterest sort ensued, and the Germans were finally forced to withdraw before the furious onslaught of the British. The fighting about Dernacourt was intense and lasted nearly all day.

The Germans delivered their last attack on the Albert-Amiens railway at about 6 o'clock, and the fight continued until it was too dark to see. The Germans at the end of the day held a small section of the railway, but their gain of ground had been comparatively small.
