Leopold Kurtz was acquitted in the Criminal Assizes of the charge of receiving 13 brass padlocks, stolen in April last, from Samuel, Benjamin & Co., by George Douglas, a driver employed by the firm. Detective Slemin found the locks at Frank Graham's store on York-street, and took them to the firm, who were not aware that they had been stolen. Douglas confessed that he had stolen the locks and sold them to Kurtz, who gave him $2 for the lot, afterwards selling them to Graham. The jury acquitted Kurtz, the evidence not being strong against him.

After boarding, Mr. Sifton retired to his cabin for the purpose of changing his dress, and appeared shortly afterwards at the dinner table in a Yukon traveling suit, of which the prominent features were a blue fiannel shirt and copperriveted overalls. The captain, attired in full naval uniform, took his customary seat at the head of the table and the company anxiously awaited the signal to begin. The captain, however, who seemed to have something on his mind, was apparently waiting for somebody. He fidgetted around generally, and looked occasionally over his shoulder towards the entrance of the salcon. Finally, when the soup was getting rather chilly, hearing one of the guests address the minister as "Mr. Sifton," the captain politely said, "I beg your pardon, Mr. Sifton, but do you know if the Minister, your father, is coming in to dinner today?" Explanations followed, and the captain has ordered the photos of all the members of the Cabinet to be sent him for future use.

The licensed victuellers want to control Estates managed, rent

The licensed victuallers want to control themselves and make a close corporate body of their trade, the same as that of the doctors. On the other hand the prohibitionists who waited on the Local Government yesterday seek to extend the power of the electors over the liquor trade. They think that when the majority of the voters of a prescribed district have made up their minds they can do without a hotel in their neighborhood, they should have the right to say so. There is logic in both contentions, but little reason in either. In the first instance, the liquor dealers are not any more justified in seeking further privileges than grocers, barbers or butchers, and, in the second, prohibitionists are not any more justified in seeking further privileges than grocers, barbers or butchers, and, in the second, prohibitionists are not any more justified in seeking further privileges than grocers, barbers or butchers, and, in the second, prohibitionists. The law already provides that the electorate of a district can object to the issuing of a license; if that power be further extended the greatest hardship may follow.

According to The Buffalo Courier, the decision of the W.C.T.U. in national convention assembled to retain the temple at Chicago was a victory for Mrs. Carse, the treasurer, but a victory with a bitter side to it, for, whereas she has hitherto been supreme in financial matters, she is now reduced to the position of a subordinate, as the funds have all to pass through the hands of a daughter of the late General Neal Dow. According to The Courier, the following is what occurred when the Temple report had been read:

Mrs. Rounds, State President of Illinois, wanted Mrs. Carse to tell just exactly how much the W.C.T.U. owned in the Temple, and not how much they expected to own. A dozen women asked that question at the same time, and a delegate from the rear of the hall rose to a question of privilege, and wanted to know if it was possible for one woman to speak at a time.

"It is not," said Miss Willard. "That fact is now being exemplified."

It was hard to get a real answer from Mrs. Carse. She branched off and toth of the ownership of stocks and bonds valued at $300,000, but everybody knows that the stock is held as collateral against the bonds, and consequently is not owned in any way by the W.C.T.U.

For an hour there was a wrangie over the simple attempt to get a questions, nutual Mrs. Hall of New York took the floor and questioned Mrs. Carse. Mrs. Hall knows something abour stocks and bonds.

swer to a number of questions, until Mrs. Hall of New York took the floor and questioned Mrs. Carse. Mrs. Hall knows something about stocks and bonds.

"How much do we own in that Temple?" asked she, and then in a few sharp sentences she pinned Mrs. Carse down and extracted the following astonishing statements:

In brief, the management had resulted as follows: Ten years ago, or nearly that, there was $55,000 cash raised, and that was placed in the hands of Mrs. Carse, with which to buy stock. She bought at par, and then, as years went by, she sold the stock, and with it bought bonds at 5 per cent. premium, and she sold the bonds at a loss of 1 per cent., and with the cash raised sne bought more stock, and that she again turned into bonds at the usual loss, until at the present day the W.C.T.U. owns exactly $15,300 in paid-up stocm, the other $41,000 having been dribbled away in interest and bond premiums. Besides that, the association own $300,000 of stock paying 5 per cent., which they have placed in the hands of a truete to guarantee the taking up of an equal amount of Temple trust bonds, bearing interest at 6 per cent.

Were a business man to find that he was putting up 6 per cent. bonds to guarantee 5 per cent. stock, the chances are that he would go out and commit suicide, to say nothing of having paid out $41,000 in interest out of a capital out $41,000 in interest out of a capital of $56,000.

When she also said that the shares she had bought with the money from the bonds had cost her $112.50 per share of the value of $100, and, besides that, she had paid a broker $7300 for floating the bonds, Mrs. Hall gasped for breath and sat down.

For the next hour there was a bitter attack on the methods waich have characterized the management of the Temple, and Mrs. Hall fourd many supporters. Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Rounds and Mrs. Hobbs riddled Mrs. Carse, and things looked dark for Temple supporters. It will interest the seven or eight hundred people who saw the boxing contest at the Toronto Athletic Club on Saturcay night between James Popp of this city and George McFadden of New York to know that John Herman, manager of the latter; considers that the former is a marvel. He declared when he returned to Buffalo that McFadden made a game fight, but was completely outclassed. "That boy, Popp," said the talented Mr. Herman, "is a wonder, and to my thinking he is the cleverest 128-pound man on earth. Buffaro people think a great deal of Erne, but I want to say to you that Popp can hold his own with Frank Erne every night in the week. Popp is the wonder of the age in the boxing line. He as very fast, wonderfully skilful and has a great reach. He uses both hands well, but is not a hard hitter. Still, in limited-round contests a man can get the money without being a hard hitter." It is a rare thing to find a man whose champion has been beaten in the ring willing to make the acknowledgment that Mr. Herman does. Erne, on the other hand, had all kinds of excuses to make, and avowed that a broken hand was the cause of his discomfiture.
