POTATO PREPARATIONS.

As much is expected of the potato crop this year it is better not to put off any longer getting ready for a bumper yield of potatoes. Tubers seem to thrive best in a moist, cloudy and temperate climate providing there is sufficient moisture in the soil and the growing season is long enough, they are not at all fastidious in this respect. The ideal soil for potatoes is a rich, deep, friable, warm sandy loam with good natural drainage and well supplied with decayed or decaying vegetable matter. The potato requires a great deal of moisture and will not thrive in cold soil where the water is stagnant near the surface, so that thorough drainage is very essential to success. As a rule seed potato should be kept for if they do, the sprouts are liable to be broken off at the time of planting. They may sprout again but that takes time and reduces their vitality. It pays, however, to sprout a few in the full light by spreading them out on the floor of the attic. If these are then planted out with care they will produce potatoes several weeks earlier and will generally give a larger yield than those planted later.

The Collection Of War Trophies

As Highly Prized Today As In Time of Romans

An Imperial Exhibit

Display in London a Marvellous Advance on All War Museums of the Past—Soldiers Keenly Interested

Throughout all ages war trophies have been regarded as the fit appurtenances of a successful campaign. In Roman times the captives themselves took part in the triumph, and the exhibition of trophies was the German custom at the celebration of victory. Today our ideas have changed; captives, so far as the Allies are concerned, are honorably treated and not made part of a "show," but the public interest in the captured trophies and actual material of war remains unabated. Londoners are just as keen to see the German guns at the Important War Exhibitions as were the Romans centuries ago to view the captured trophies and military museums of the past, by virtue of its marvelous photographs, writes Capt. H. B. C. Pollard from London, as reported in the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times. The photographs which line the walls are vast ensembles some twenty feet long, and the figures are life-size. They have been taken in the very press of action, and are not mere poses collected in safety miles behind the lines.

Overseas Trophies There.

The Canadian, New Zealand and Australian authorities have all collaborated with the Imperial War Museum management, War Office, Admiralty and Air Ministry, all have contributed their finest photographs and most interesting trophies of the war, so that the whole display is genuinely representative of the nation. But even more interesting than the exhibits was the crowd of spectators that attended Lord French's opening of the exhibition a few days ago. The audience was indeed representative of Great Britain and the Empire. Soldiers, of course, predominated, and they came from all the corners of the earth. This khaki element was not there to grace a society function, but was keen to review old scenes and refresh old memories. The audience walked and moved stiffly with the sore restraint born of wounds and the rheumatic ails of the Flanders lowlands. The mechanism of war that attracted the civilian element were familiar to them and weighed but little with them in comparison with the scale models of battlefields.

Models of Battlefields.

Round the model of the City of Ypres both khaki and the older folk who proudly bore their mourning garments thronged. The scale of the model was large enough to show a tree the size of a match, a window in a ruined house, a garden, a street, a man pointed reminiscently to miniature ruins that marked the sites of dugouts, shelters, or were even hills.

The soldiers, too, came in for a great deal of quiet cross-examination from the poor black-and-white parents.

"Where was Sanctuary Wood?" "Please," asked an old lady plaintively—"can you show me which is the Mean road?" "Englishmen, Canadians, all ranks from general to subaltern, were swift and soft-spoken in their explanations; keen to expound and knowledgeable in sympathy, for they, too, had left memories of sacrifice in the city of the dead.

Memories of Vimy.

There was something more than a bond of chance-met acquaintanceship about the exhibition. The trophies were too poignant, too intimate—the audience too acutely "en rapport." People who in the implicit but silent partnership that befriends relics conferred upon them, and somehow or other as soon as the opening speeches were over little groups were going round. Here a New Zealander was conveying a group of English ladies, there an Australian was talking hailing French to distinguished visitors. Khaki was telling his personal reminiscences of Vimy Ridge and the Butte de Warlencourt. Machine guns, snipers' marks, trench mortars and what not came in for a personal explanation, and all social differences were laid aside.

"They Shall Not Pass."

The Allies and all that the alliance means found expression in the little case that held relics of impregnable Verdun, presented by its commandant. The board that carried the motto of the troops, "Ils ne passeront pas"—a simple signboard, meant more to the visitors than a mere museum exhibit. British and French alike, we know what Verdun meant, and the memory of its immortal glory transformed that simple case of exhibits into a radiant shrine. So it was with all things in this first temporary exhibition of the Imperial War Museum. The objects all speak of heroism, endurance and self-sacrifice. Many of the exhibits are made all or in part by women's labor patriotically and ungrudgingly given, and all bespeak the national will to conquer and to achieve a lasting and victorious peace. These models, too, made by wounded men, the shells and engines made by women's labor, are no less trophies of war than are the shattered "goniols" of Zeppelins or the mortars and field guns captured from the enemy.

WAR GARDENERS

Most encouraging reports as to the progress made by the war gardeners were presented at the meeting of the executive of the War Gardens Association, held last evening at T. H. Estabrook's office.

The executive considered the question of procuring sprayers, lime, bluestone, etc., and a committee for its purpose was named. It was proposed that this fall a special drive be made to secure more tillable land and to have it ploughed and made ready for next season.

DON'T WASTE FOOD

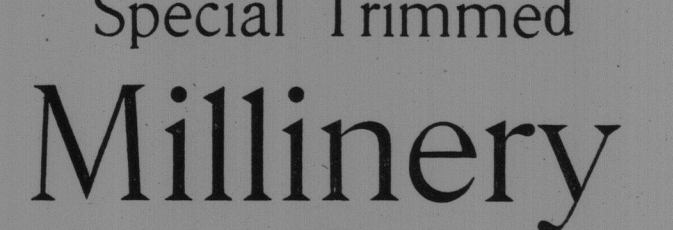

The order-in-council against waste, making it an offence subject to heavy penalties, would apply if food were wasted in any of the following ways:

1. If food fit for human use is wilfully or negligently damaged or thrown away.
2. If the person who has the disposal of food unreasonably retains it until it goes bad.
3. This applies to producers, dealers or private individuals who fail to market or otherwise dispose of food in excess of their own requirements in time to prevent waste; also to those who refuse to sell at a loss, if current prices require, in order to avoid food waste.
4. The penalties are a fine of not less than $100 or more than $1,000, or imprisonment for up to three months, or both fine and imprisonment. In the case of dealers, waste may also result in cancellation of the Canada Food Board license.
5. It is the duty of each municipality in Canada to enforce the regulations against waste within its municipal limits, and when a fine is imposed as a result of proceedings instituted by a provincial or municipal officer, such fine shall be paid into the provincial or municipal treasury. It is up to every individual citizen to see that the regulations are enforced.

SERBIA AIDED BY U. S.

Washington, May 15—Serbia received another credit of $8,000,000 from the treasury today, making her total indebtedness to the United States $9,000,000 and the total of all the Allies $45,765,870,900.
