A LOVE STORY.

"I am sorry," she whispered, "but I am afraid I shall not be able to see you again." The young man looked pained as he strove to hide his emotion. "Why, is there anybody else I thought you liked me a little," he stammered; "you know I love you, and I shall always continue doing so."

"But have you noticed how people turn around and stare at me in these shabby clothes; whatever must they think?"

A smile of relief broke out on his face as he said: "They think, dear, that you ought to do the same as they and I do; go to Brager's, 185-187 Union street, and he will clothe you with the best for $1 a week."

WORRY, WORRY, WORRY.

The life of the average wage earner is one continual worry as to how to keep his job and make ends meet. Everyone willing to work should be guaranteed a steady job. Socialism will do this for all workers and abolish the idle man or woman.

GERMANIA RULES THE WAVES!

It will be remembered that German warships sank fifteen British fishing boats in the North Sea, captured a quantity of fish, and took the crews of fishermen into Wilhelmshaven as prisoners of war.

A few days later the Manchester Evening News published the following clever verses, which, as the reader will observe, are supposed to have been written by a German in praise of the German fleet—

There is joy in Wilhelmshaven and the cities round about; Kiel is decked with trophies and the bells ring gladly out. The glorious news is spreading from the coast towns of the north, and a thousand tingling wires bear the heartening message forth.

From Tilist, West to Emden, from Cuxhaven to Trieste, They know it now in Moscow, they have heard it told in Brest, That England's Ocean Empire is a hollow broken boast.

For the prowess of our fleet is known throughout her stricken coast.

We have decked our guns with herring, and laced our shrouds with sprats; While all our noble captains (wearing fish-tails in their hats) Are shouting, "Hoeh, der Kaiser!" What exultant thrills they feel! When our admiral for pennant, flies a captured conger eel.

By the stricken homes of Grimsby the fisherman stands perplexed, And the codders of Cleethorpes wonder what will happen next. For Yarmouth hath no savour now, her quaysides all lie bare.

And the eloquence of Billingsgate is silenced in despair.

We have taken many prisoners and sunk no end of ships; We have taken all their fishes; we have left them all the chips; We have shown a startled world that our dauntless sailor sons Can knock out anything afloat that doesn't carry guns.

We have sent a thankful message to our Ally up above! We have sent a sample cod steak to the Emperor we love! We have sent sincere expressions (in a most respectful note) Of the hope he may not get a bone in his Imperial throat.

"The Germany's devout intent to dominate the seas, And we feel we're surely getting there 'To discharge this holy mission and fulfill this pious wish "The German fleet has captured a quantity of fish!"
