LA MARQUISE DE FONTENOY

Lord Charles Cavendish-Bentinck III With Blood Poisoning in Toronto—The King as a Stamp Collector

(Copyright, 1912, by the Brentwood Com.)

Lord Charles Cavendish-Bentinck, who is lying so seriously ill of septicaemia in the Victoria Memorial Hospital in Toronto, contracted while in Winnipeg where he was on a shooting expedition, is the second of the two half-brothers of the Duke of Portland, and until the marriage of the latter stood second and third in the line of succession to the family honours and vast wealth of the dukedom.

His prospects in this direction have become more remote since the birth of a couple of sturdy boys to the duke.

Lord Charles, like his other and older brother, Lord Henry Cavendish-Bentinck, is a former officer of the crack Ninth Lancers, and served with his corps throughout the South African war, retiring with the rank of major. He is married to Clely Grenfell, daughter of Seymour Grenfell, of Ellbank House, Teglow, and sister of that Riverdale Taplow who spends so much of his time on this side of the water, and is a famous polo player.

Lord Charles and the Duke of Portland are the sons of the late Lieutenant-General Arthur Cavendish-Bentinck, grandson of the third duke. The general was twice married. His son by his first wife, (daughter of Sir Vincent White) is the present duke. The second wife was a daughter of Lord Kilmaine's brother, Dean Browne of Lismore.

She was a very remarkable woman and managed to win the affection of her stepson to such an extent that when he was a relatively penniless officer of the Coldstream Guards and succeeded to the titles and estates of his third cousin, the fifth Duke of Portland, whom he had never seen in his life, he not only made very handsome allowances to his half-brother and his sister, but also used the great influence which he had acquired through his territorial possessions to obtain for his stepmother a peerage in her own right, the Barony of Bolsover. He could do this, however, only on condition that on her death it should be inherited, not by her eldest son, Lord Henry Cavendish-Bentinck, but that it should revert to himself, although there was no blood relationship between them.

The fifth Duke of Portland was that eccentric peer whose horror of being seen by strangers was so intense that he spent millions of dollars in adding vast suburban apartments to Welbeck Abbey, including large and roomy tunnels in every direction beneath the extensive park, many of them terminating near the lodge gates of the estate. It was entirely owing to the difficulty of finding people who had ever seen this retiring duke in later years that some persons of the name of Druce were able for a long time after his death to carry off the title, pending the time when the duke had led a double life and that while he was a peer of the realm at Welbeck Abbey, he was merely the proprietor of a Baker street bazaar, (the father and grandfather of the respective litigants) when he showed up in London, and the claim, however, was proven to rest only on a singular resemblance between the Duke and upon several remarkable coincidences. But the suit developed into a "cause celebre," which dragged on for years before the pretensions of the Druces were definitely thrown out of court.

GIRL'S VANITY LEADS TO CASE OF MURDER
Engaged to Three Young Men and There Was Fatal Quarrel When They Met

Geneva, June 13.—At the village of Koppferhammer, near Lucerne, a beautiful girl out of vanity, became engaged to three young men. For some time she cleverly kept them apart, but eventually the three young men met at the girl's home and a fierce quarrel resulted. Two of the men took common part against the son of a wealthy resident of Lucerne, who probably was regarded by them as the more dangerous rival, and threw the young man out of a third floor window in the presence of the terrified fiancée.

The man fell on his head on the pavement and was found dead by a milkman in the morning. His assailants have been arrested on a charge of murder and the girl has been ordered to hold herself at the disposition of the police and has been forbidden to leave the village.

A Motto For You
By RUTH CAMERON

He who gives quickly gives twice.

That sentiment was the motto of one of the finest men in this country. He says that he read it somewhere when he was a child, was deeply impressed by its meaning, promptly adopted it as his motto, and has proved the truth of it over and over again.

When I first read the sentiment, I failed to appreciate its full force, and wondered why he cared for it so much, but somehow the words stayed in my subconscious mind, and the other day they came to the surface again with a new richness of meaning. And the circumstances which brought them there and illumined them were these: A nice little shop girl went out of her way to do me a favor. She held out a coat for me during a special sale until I could find out if it would harmonize with the dress with which I expected to wear it, and when I found out that it most emphatically would not, she was just as kind and courteous as if I had bought it. I thanked her as cordially as I knew how, and then I found her number from one of the other girls, with the intention of sending her a box of candy to prove my gratitude. When I left the shop my first impulse was to go straight to the candy store, but unfortunately something distracted me, and I went home that day without carrying out my intention. The next you must know from experience of your own; the errand not being absolutely imperative, has been put off again and again. I have forgotten the girl's number, and I imagine that by this time she has quite forgotten the whole incident. And all because I did not give quickly. If I had gone that moment and bought the candy on the strength of my first impulse, she would have been turning my energy and my money towards some other thing.

You see—"he who gives quickly gives twice."

—And even more true is the converse, "he who gives slowly gives not at all." Surely you remember that kind note of appreciation which you meant to write. You had especially enjoyed some club or Church entertainment, and you thought it would be kind to write and congratulate to the committee; you had been wonderfully impressed by some speaker or writer, and you said, "I will tell him so. It may help." But instead of sitting down while you were hot with your kind impulses and carrying it out at once, you thought, "I'll do it tomorrow." And of course, tomorrow never came.

"Do it now" is a more important motto for kind impulses than for any other business. There is seldom a tomorrow for kind impulses. They are creatures of a day; they are like flowers, as fragile as they are beautiful.

"He who gives quickly gives twice." Will you not make that one of your mottoes?

NO FOUNDATION TO REPORT ABOUT THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL

Montreal, June 12.—“Absolutely without foundation,” said Colonel Lowther, aide-de-camp to the Duke of Connaught, when a statement published in the Manchester Guardian in reference to His Royal Highness resigning the position of governor-general of Canada at the end of the year was read to him.

Colonel Lowther said that the Duke took the office for two years, and would occupy it for that length of time, with the possibility of extending his stay here for five years, the regular governor-general's term.

The announcement of Colonel Lowther may be regarded as an official statement from the duke on the subject, and was probably made after consultation with the governor-general.

TIME FOR A SPRING TONIC

In the spring we suffer from the bad effects of winter living. During the winter the clear, cold weather is a powerful germicide, and keeps us up, but when the spring break-up comes myriads of disease germs are let loose and the run-down system fails to fight them off. The customarily high death rate in spring proves this.

Almost everybody needs a spring tonic to help him over this trying time. Otherwise he loses much valuable time in fighting off "spring fever," or contracts some form of disease. Nothing will so certainly help you as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. This food cure is a true tonic. It actually forms new, rich blood, strengthens the nerves and puts new energy and vigor into mind and body.

It is not a stimulant to whip up tired nerves, but by its uplifting effects of forcing lasting benefit. Keep well this spring by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

CHEAP 'PHONES FOR THE FARMERS

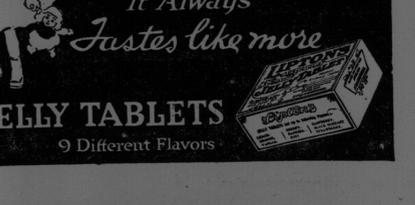

(Moncton Transcript).

Mr. Copp's policy of aiding the establishment of a cheap rural telephone service has been made the subject of sneer and jest by some of the government papers; as if they thought he was promising the farmers something they had no right to expect.

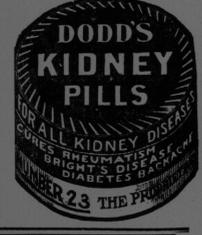

But why should not the farmers of New Brunswick have telephones? In countries less rich in natural resources than this province the farmers have telephones. And why shouldn't our farmers enjoy some of the fruits of mechanical invention and social progress? Why should all the fruits of progress be concentrated in cities? Why should the farmer remain comparatively isolated when other classes live in closer touch and communication than was dreamed possible in a former age?

The farmer's separation from his neighbor and his long hours of toil make regular social intercourse difficult. So few are supplied with telephones that the lack
